SMALLPOX SPREADING

TOKYO (UPI) — Two suspected smallpox sufferers were placed under observation today, sparking fears of an epidemic in Tokyo.

The World Health Organization declared London a smallpox-infected area Friday, following the detection of three confirmed cases.

The first suspect to be admitted to Tokyo's Ebara hospital isolation ward was a 46-year-old housewife. There was no immediate indication how she might have contracted the disease.

Later today, a 24-year-old college student who flew in from Bombay in an Egyptian Airlines plane, was detained for examination at the airport and later admitted to hospital.

Doctors said he had been treated in a Bombay hospital for chickenpox, but has symptoms resembling smallpox.

Banks Told to Stop Wild Lending Spree

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Federal money managers have clamped down on wild lending sprees by Canadian banks. The Bank of Canada announced Friday night an increase in the interest rate charged on its rare loans to chartered banks to 5¼ per cent from 4¾ per cent, in effect since October, 1971.

The new rate, effective Monday, is expected to stimulate an increase in other charges for a variety of loans from short-term business borrowings on the money market to mortgage rates for new homes.

The announcement came on a day when Statistics Canada reported the consumer price index climbed to 145.7 in March from 145.3 in February.

A statement issued with the bank-rate announcement by Gerald K. Bouey, governor of the central bank since February, expressed concern about the rapid expansion of lending by chartered banks since the beginning of the year.

At the same time, Bouey said that central bank policy in managing money markets "remains firmly committed to maintaining rates of monetary growth high enough to support a strong expansion of Canadian output and employment."

The federal bank — manipulator of credit and spending conditions in the country through its controls on money supply and interest rates — thus is trying to prevent borrowing and spending from expanding as swiftly as it has during the last few months while avoiding a squeeze that would slow productive activity and cost more jobs.

Government measures — notably the tax cuts and deficit spending promised in the Feb. 19 budget — are designed to encourage spending and business activity in order to generate more jobs. But such measures also tend to stimulate price inflation.

The central bank clearly is anxious to guard against credit policies that would encourage further runaway inflation in months to come. At the same time, it is trying to stop short of jamming the brakes on credit and upsetting the government's expansionary program.

Also involved in the bank's change of its influential interest charge is concern that Canadian interest rates have been lagging behind rates charged in the United States and Europe.

The lower rates in Canada tend to attract foreign borrowers, leading to an outflow of cash. That in turn puts donward pressure on the Canadian dollar's exchange rate in currency markets, which would disrupt merchandise trade.

Money markets are influenced by Bank of Canada interest rates when the chartered banks lack cash and

Phony Files Now Total Two Thirds

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Nearly two-thirds of the insurance policies claimed by the scandal-ridden Equity Funding Life Insurance Co. were phony — no one really had bought them — a preliminary audit by the California Department of Insurance showed Friday.

The department, which has been auditing the giant firm since a possible multimillion dollar fraud was uncovered, announced Friday that the Los Angeles company carried 97,111 insurance policies on its books when the department seized Equity's assets and records last weekend.

Of the policies, 56,091 were phony and 34,796 were in force, the department said.

Thursday, the corporate parent, Equity Funding Corp. of America, declared bankruptcy. The California insurance department has been awarded conservator powers over Equity Funding Life Insurance Co. and Equity Funding Corp., the parent's bookkeeping subsidiary.

The heart of the purported scandal is the charge that the insurance company invented customers, fabricating policyholders who never existed. The alleged bogus policies, which made the company appear far more prosperous than it was, sold to other insurance companies — at least 15 of them — for millions of dollars, investigators say.

In another development Friday, it was revealed that the downfall of Equity apparently was touched off by a telephone call a month ago to a New York insurance expert.

Raymond Dirks, a vice-president of Delafield, Childs and Co. in New York, said he received the call from Ronald Secrist, then employed by another insurance company in Atlanta.

Dirks said Secrist told him he had worked both for Equity Funding and a subsidiary in New Jersey.

Troops Rope Irish Bomber

Times News Services

BELFAST — British troops tied a rope to a man's leg Friday and ordered him to defuse a bomb found in his car.

The incident, watched by several hundred bystanders, occurred after police chased a car through thick traffic. The vehicle was trapped in a one-way street; two men got out and ran off; and one was caught.

Police found a bomb in the car trunk, but the man — identified by military sources as an Irish Republican Army explosives expert — said it was not primed to go off.

A British Army officer tied a rope around the man's ankle to prevent his escaping. Soldiers played out the rope and kept rifles trained on the man as he walked to his car.

"The man seemed very sure of himself and walked cockily to the car," said one bystander.

"He opened the trunk, took out a brown paper package about a foot square, walked away from the car and put it in the middle of the road."

An army spokesman confirmed the bomb — 15 pounds of mixed explosives, a detonator and fuse wrapped in a plastic bag — was not primed.

In another incident, gunmen sprayed a Belfast bus and an army truck with gunfire today, but there were no injuries.

Six shots hit the bus as it passed through the Falls Road district, but the five passengers on board narrowly escaped.

An army Land Rover following the bus was hit by two shots, but there were no injuries.

PLANT PROTEIN TO FATTEN MEAT

TORONTO (CP) — Federal Food and Drug Act regulations are being changed to allow addition of protein from plants to meat products.

This will result in cheaper and nutritionally superior hamburger, canned meat loaf, meatballs, wieners and sausages by this fall.

In the United States protein from soy beans already is being added to hamburger and prices have come down 20 per cent.

Dr. Paul Simms of Ottawa, a federal vegetable protein researcher, says food-tasting panels consistently rate the mixed product higher than all-beef hamburger.

ICCS Copter Downed

Times News Services

Two helicopters carrying about 16 members of the Vietnam peacekeeping forces, including three Canadian officers, disappeared over Communist-held territory today, sparking a new demand from NDP leader David Lewis in Ottawa that Canada get out of Vietnam.

The helicopters were ferrying members of the International Commission for Control and Supervision to Lao Bao, a Communist controlled village on the South Vietnamese-Laotian border which had been designated by the Communists as a port of entry for replacement of war materials.

One of the helicopters was believed to have been shot down.

"I am hit; I am going down," a crewman radioed in English.

It was the first reported munication with either of the two helicopters, the source said. It was believed the second helicopter may have gone to the aid of the other.

A Communist source said earlier the crew and passengers of one helicopter were "rescued." But this source gave no details and made no mention of the fate of those aboard the other helicopter.

It was the first reported shooting down of an ICCS helicopter.

In Ottawa, Lewis said:

"What has happened underlines the position the NDP took in Parliament — that we should now inform all the parties concerned that we will withdraw after giving them the three-months notice which the Paris agreement requires," he said.

Lewis said if the helicopters had been properly marked and "somebody ignored the signs and signals, than that's a pretty serious incident" which could lead to the end of the ICCS.

"Like every other Canadian I hope that none of our people was hurt. Certainly I hope strongly that none of them was killed.

"But we will know better

INDIA'S TROOPS RELIEVE SIKKIM

NEW DELHI (CP) — Indian troops took over responsibility for law and order throughout the Himalayan kingdom of Sikkim today as about 15,000 anti-government demonstrators marched on the capital, Gangtok, according to reports reaching here.

Reports said the marchers, after spending the night on the outskirts of Gangtok, entered the capital in a peaceful procession to demand that the ruler give up some of his power and become accountable to the people.

More Murders

HAMILTON, Bermuda (AP) — Less than four weeks after the murders of its governor and his aide-de-camp, these islands Friday night were shocked by another double murder. Two partners in a city supermarket were shot dead during an armed robbery attempt shortly after the supermarket closed for the day.

Shipyard Strikes

COLLINGWOOD, Ont. (CP) — Work halted on two big ship-building jobs today as between 850 and 900 workers at Collingwood Shipyards Ltd. set up picket lines in a strike over wages and fringe benefits.

Bombs in Cyprus

NICOSIA (AP) — Four bombs exploded at scattered points on Cyprus during the night, damaging a car, a truck and two houses. No casualties were reported.

'Screwball Dames' Hit For Beef Demand Drop

Times News Services

Beef boycotters in British Columbia have been called "a bunch of screwball dames" by the operator of one of the largest feed-lots in the Fraser Valley.

Dave Hunter, beefing about the boycott Friday, said the "screwball dames" think they have a "lot of groovy ideas."

Hunter's attack came fast on the heels of news that cattle auctioneers throughout the Fraser Valley report the demand for beef has been slipping during the past two weeks.

They expect the decline in prices to continue during the spring and summer.

Hunter said the housewife can look to lower beef prices but cheap beef is a thing of the past.

He said because of higher prices for fattening rations and the higher cost of steers, it costs him an additional $125 to finish an animal for market, compared with last year.

"Beef prices reached their peak about three weeks ago," he said.

"A good operator doesn't want to be caught with too many animals on hand. We could lose $100 a head."

Prices for good steers are down two to three cents at 44 cents, cows are down four cents at about 31 cents and bulls down six at 34.5.

"Beef prices have been abnormally low for the last 20 years and there has been a serious reduction in production," he said.

"At the same time we have been eating and exporting more beef than ever before.

"The farmer and the industry needed this increase in prices 10 years ago and if they got it then, there wouldn't be this present shortage of beef," he said.

There are 35 feeder lots on the coast which handle 200 to 5,000 head a year.

Rainstorm Adds To Mississippi Flood Threat

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A widespread rainstorm pelted the already-saturated lower Mississippi River Valley today. Residents in the lush Delta, including 2,000 Louisiana prisoners, prepared to move to higher ground if necessary.

From Arkansas to Louisiana, the already-swollen tributaries of the Mississippi River backed into low areas, and rains continued to batter the levee system.

Along the Mississippi system an estimated seven million acres of land are under water.

PLANS OFFERED

For home craftsmen on the lookout for new projects, the Victoria Times presents a new Saturday feature beginning today on Page 22.

Called Deco-Plans, the feature will offer hundreds of ideas for things which can be built for the home — inside and out — ranging from built-in beds, storage walls, kitchen serving centres to garden furniture, carports and children's playhouses. There will even be ideas for summer cottages. Plans for all the projects can be ordered by readers at nominal cost and, an important factor, the plans are Canadian which means no problems with materials. All Deco-Plan projects can be built by craftsmen with moderate skills and with a minimum of tools and equipment.

Deco-Plan also offers readers a catalogue of 227 projects for which plans can be ordered and, of particular interest to those who are considering a recreation room in their home, a folio of 10 plans and complete step-by-step instructions showing how to do it.

Barrett Puts Lid on Pork Barrel

British Columbia will tolerate no more "handouts, grants, concessions, subsidies or gifts to private industry," Permier Barrett told the legislature Friday.

The people of the province are going to get a "decent return" for the money invested in projects exploiting B.C. resources, he said in announcing an amendment to the Revenue Act.

The amendment — labelled a "veiled form of nationalism" by opposition critics — will permit the government, through Barrett as finance minister, to invest surplus funds in any corporation chosen by the government.

The bill puts too much power in the finance minister's hands, the opposition charged in a lengthy debate which ended with the bill receiving approval in principle and going to committee.

Barrett said the government does not plan to just start "playing the market." Investments in the stock of corporations will be only those which are considered "prudent and in the public interest."

Previously, investments of the surplus funds from the consolidated revenue fund have been restricted to chartered banks, Barrett said. The seven-word amendment allows investment "in the capital stock of any corporation."

Liberal spokesman Allan Williams (L—West Vancouver-Howe Sound) said the amendment removes the second-last stage of decision-making from the process of government investment. Any investment projects should be first approved by the legislative assembly, he said.

Barrett argued that any deals made by the government come under the scrutiny of the house's public accounts committee, which is chaired by a member of the official opposition.

Responsibility for governing the province lies in the hands of the government party, according to British parliamentary tradition, Barrett said.

CANCER STUDY WARNS OF BACON

By MICHAEL J. CONLON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A privately-financed report on a widely-used food additive claimed today that bacon may be "the most dangerous" food in the supermarket" in terms of cancer-causing potential.

The allegation was made by the Centre for Science in the Public Interest in a 55-page study of sodium nitrite, a preservative used for hot dogs, hams, fish and a long list of other products in addition to bacon.

The agriculture department and the Food and Drug Administration have had the nitrite question under review for some time.

Their position is that evidence against the chemical so far does not outweigh the good that it does in preventing growth of bacteria in meat.

The centre is a non-profit organization staffed primarily by scientists who are paid through foundation money and income from sales of various reports it publishes.

The study on sodium nitrite, written by Michael Jacobson, who has a Phd in biology, urged the government to ban use of the additive in food.

"Eating a hot dog or strip of bacon now and then will not guarantee cancer," Jacobson said.

"However, food made without nitrite is certainly safer than that made with nitrite. I recommend that people stop eating cured meats, particularly bacon, until the threat of nitrosamines is eliminated."

Jacobson said nitrosamines — a combination of nitrites and amines formed sometimes after meat is cured or when it is cooked — are "among the most potent cancer-causing agents yet discovered."

Butcher Takes Holiday

A local butcher is going to carry on next week where this week's meat boycotters left off.

Bill Johnston, owner of Grant's Meats at 1022 Cook St., is closing his meat department next week.

"I'd like to support this boycott," said Johnston, a 25-year veteran of the meat business. It's the first meat boycott he's seen.

His closing will be "sort of a back-up to the boycott," he said, and will also give him a week's holiday.

"If all the butchers in Victoria would do the same it might do some good," he said. But knowing Victoria's butchers as well as he does, Johnston thinks it highly unlikely they'll follow suit.

Johnston made his decision Friday after seeing the consumer support for the boycott during the week.

"There has been a drop in sales, no doubt about it," he said. His one-man boycott will cost him a week's meat sales, plus the rent and power bills he'll still have to pay.

Johnston said he didn't think meat prices here were terribly high, compared to wages people get. People in European countries pay more for their meat on lower wages, he said.

U.S. Aids Soviet Jews

WASHINGTON (WP) — The United States extended $31 million in aid Friday to voluntary Jewish organizations providing assistance to Soviet Jews migrating to Israel.

The move is the first expenditure from $50 million Congress appropriated last year to aid Soviet Jewish emigrants.

The funds will be used for the care of Soviet Jews in transit to Israel, including the expansion of a transit centre in Austria and absorption centres in Israel where the immigrants are received.

More than 32,000 Soviet Jews emigrated to Israel during the past year.

Hit-and-Run Kills Woman

A 46-year-old woman was killed and her male companion taken to hospital following a hit and run on the Island Highway early this morning.

Ella Howard, 46, of 17 Edgeware Motel, died after she was struck by a car, now identified as a '64 Pontiac, opposite the Six Mile House at 1:30 this morning.

Her companion, Oliver Memnook, is in Victoria General, where his condition is described as satisfactory.

The couple are believed to have been walking from their motel towards Victoria early this morning when they were struck by a car in the middle of the Island Highway.

Colwood RCMP are still trying to trace the car, which has damage to its left headlight and fender. The make of the car was pinpointed around noon today, as RCMP gathered chrome and fragments at the accident scene.

98-YEAR RESIDENT

Funeral services will be held Monday for Mrs. Annie Frances Middleton, a 98-year resident of Victoria who died Thursday.

Mrs. Middleton, who lived at 344 Davida St., was just three weeks short of 100 when she died.

Her husband, Edmund Middleton, died 25 years ago.

Born in Stratford, Ont., in 1873, the youngest of eight children, Mrs. Middleton travelled by covered wagon with her parents to San Francisco two years later and then took the steamer Dakota to Victoria.

Her father, Alexander Clyde, was founder of the First Baptist Church on Pandora Ave., which was dedicated in 1877. Mrs. Middleton was a life-long member of First Baptist Church.

She is survived by four daughters, Mrs. Elsie Coles, Mrs. Grace Smith, Mrs. Mabel Coles and Mrs. Verna West, all of Victoria, as well as eight grandchildren, 21 great-grandchildren and three great-great-grandchildren.

Funeral will be held in McCall Brothers Floral Chapel, followed by cremation.

Students' Bombs Back Protests

BARCELONA, Spain (Reuter) — Student demonstrators hurled gasoline bombs in a march through central Barcelona Friday night after a day of protests against the recent death of a worker in a clash with police.

About 10,000 workers took part in a series of unofficial stoppages in Barcelona and the surrounding area but their protest did not amount to the general strike which clandestine opposition groups had demanded.

. . . CREDIT CURBS

need loans from the central bank. While this is rare, it has been happening recently.

Even the knowledge that the central bank rate has been raised tends to boost other interest rates and make credit more difficult to get.

Foreign borrowers have been interested in borrowing in Canada because of such factors as the prime lending rate of the chartered banks. This rate which is charged best business customers is six per cent a year compared to 6½ per cent in the United States.

In his statement, Bouey said that reasons for the interest rate increase "relate to the recent substantial increases in short-term interest rates in the United States and overseas, and to the recent very rapid rates of bank credit expansion and monetary growth in Canada."

"The rate of increase in bank loans, already very high, has become even higher," he said.

"During the first quarter of 1973, chartered bank loans increased at an annual rate of 26 per cent. Despite considerable switching by the chartered banks from liquid assets into loans during this period, the banking system grew at a rate of 19 per cent a year, and public holdings of currency and bank deposits at a rate of 17 per cent a year."

He said that a high rate of monetary expansion is needed to finance the "vigorous growth in output and employment now under way."

"But rates of monetary and credit expansion above those that are needed are undesirable because, due to the long time lags involved, they are likely to make it more difficult to contain inflation and maintain a high and rising level of employment at a later stage," he said.

Don't Like Parade

TEL AVIV (AP) — Israel's powerful labor union leader, Yitzhak Ben-Aharon, has turned down an official invitation to attend the big military parade May 8 marking Israel's 25th birthday, saying the $52 million it will cost should have gone to social welfare. Ben-Aharon, secretary-general of the Histadrut Labor Federation, was one of many Israelis who have voiced opposition to the parade in Jerusalem.

Sunderland, on the crest of an astonishing revival after beating Manchester City in the fifth round, staggered Arsenal with goals from Vic Halom and Billy Hughes before Charlie George netted an 84th minute goal for Arsenal.

Barrett Clamps On Pork-Barrel

This legislation is merely a continuation of that policy.

Newell Morrison (SC—Victoria) said he just realized that Premier Barrett is in fact "a frustrated Monopoly player."

"And the sad thing is that he's playing with the people's money," he added.

Morrison charged that it would be "irresponsible" for the premier to gamble public money on any investment he sees fit.

James Chabot (SC—Columbia River) termed the bill "big club legislation by a leftwing government," and said another title for it could be the "Waffle Act of 1973."

He said it was basically wrong for the government to turn over the sole powers of investment to one man, the finance minister, and especially to a person whose experience in financial matters was, by his own admission, limited to "selling bananas from Fiji."

If the government's genuine intention is to invest only in companies that will create jobs that should be spelled out in the legislation, with a clear statement of objectives. "Unless you do so, people will only assume you intend to invest it in a very willy-nilly way."

Chabot, to some laughter, commented that Barrett "could get up some morning after having a bad dream and decide to invest in some corporation." He asked whether Barrett plans to use the legislation to acquire a stock position in B.C. Telephone, Westcoast Transmission or other large corporations.

"This is dangerous legislation. It puts a cloud over the entire business community of British Columbia," he said.

When Chabot moved adjournment of the debate, however, and then requested a formal vote after the voice vote was taken, his motion was defeated 28 to 8.

The seven words in the amendments, empowering the minister of finance to invest revenue surplus funds "in the capital stock of any corporation," were tantamount to removing "every safeguard built up through a century of responsible political process in British Columbia," claimed Pat McGeer (L—Vancouver-Point Grey).

"It is really a blank cheque bill," he said, suggesting that Barrett's first step when the legislation is passed will be to acquire control of B.C. Tel — to which Barrett replied "wrong number."

McGeer said the premier may for years have nourished secret ambitions to acquire a steel mill or a race track, "and now that he has the people's money given to him he will be able to indulge all the fantasies he has had in the past."

"This is without question the riskiest bill that has ever been introduced in the legislature because it does open the door all the way to the minister of finance taking all our surplus revenue and investing it in any venture, however speculative, leaving the public with no recourse and no way to get the money back," he said.

He urged the government to reconsider the bill and bring it back in such a form that it spells out the investment limitations to be placed on the minister, if the government still considers it "absolutely essential" to move into the private sphere.

The amount of money that can be invested should be limited, McGeer said, "so that we know the limits of the amount of money we are going to lose" if the enterprises prove unsuccessful.

In the fiscal year just starting the surplus from consolidated revenue could total $180 million and "that's a fair amount of money to gamble with," McGeer said.

For the Conservatives, house leader Scott Wallace said their concerns parallel very closely those of the Liberals, and essentially these are centred around the wide-ranging powers entrusted to a single minister.

The bill smacks of a veiled form of nationalization," Wallace said, and if the government plans to take over any corporations it should say so clearly and openly.

Wallace said the Conservatives firmly believe government's function is to create an economically healthy climate in which industry will find it worthwhile to establish and operate — not to enter the field directly as a participant.

"Our main concern is that the government should not in any way gamble with the taxpayers' dollars," he said.

ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS UNDERGROUND

TORONTO (CP) — A Toronto newspaper quotes Immigration Minister Robert Andras as saying the great majority — perhaps 90 per cent — of illegal immigrants to Canada remain "underground."

Only 9,846 of an estimated 50,000 to 200,000 persons who entered Canada as "visitors" but have taken up residence illegally, came forward to register themselves by the March 30 deadline, Andras is quoted as saying in an Ottawa interview.

The paper says the real figure may be even higher.

"From other sources, it was learned that the cabinet early last fall accepted the 200,000 figure. And that was before the great October rush that saw 4,000 to 5,000 phoney 'tourists' arrive each weekend."

Andras said: "We're going to have to apprehend all those who are here illegally, eventually. They will be detained and allowed to appeal."

The story says that in addition to the unknown number of bogus visitors, the immigration department has a list of 120,000 people who have overstayed their visitors' visas.

Free Fashion Shows Feature Feathers

DON'T LET the drab winter plumage of this horned grebe fool you. Beneath it hides a dapper little Beau Brummell that'll be the rage of the grebe world in another month. (Harold Hosford photo.)

You won't see it advertised anywhere but there's a big-time fashion show running in town and it's free.

A continuous, dawn to dusk affair, appearing simultaneously at many locations, the show gives the potential viewer a wide choice of times and venues.

One of the best of these is Oak Bay — particularly the marina at Oak Bay. A strange place to hold a fashion show? Maybe so, but where else would you hold it when your models are grebes and the displays are the latest in spring, nuptial raiment of these familiar aquatic birds.

While up Brentwood way you might sit in on the show of the red-necked grebes. Oak Bay presents those little teal-size, black and white jobs that work the waters between the docks and around the breakwaters, the horned grebes.

At the moment our models are still mostly in their winter colors but if you're persistent and drop in on the show several times in the next three or four weeks, you'll see a remarkable transformation as the grebes exchange the functional black and white of winter for the visually-stimulating affectations of the breeding season.

It's the time of spring moult for the grebes and while most other birds have already completed the pre-breeding moult, the grebes are among the last to make the change. Some will actually arrive on their prairie breeding ponds still wearing the remnants of their winter plumage. Others will complete the change before they leave. It is these that we will be watching at Oak Bay.

Don't look for any sudden and immediate transformation; it's a slow proces and will require patience to see it through. But it'll be worth the wait, because once in their full spring plumage, horned grebes are among our most striking birds. The change will be most marked in the feathers of the head and neck.

At the moment, few horned grebes give any indication that their current dull-white neck is anything but a permanent feature of their appearance. But in the next few weeks, a rich chestnut will replace the white on the front of the neck and flow down covering the breast and upper sides of the body.

At the same time the white cheeks and grey-black of the head will be giving way to a horned grebe's crowning glory. Those white cheeks will gradually change to a glossy iridescent black, as will the crown and back of the head.

But as these processes proceed, a peculiar change takes place on the sides of the grebe's head. Beginning at the eye, and extending back to eventually project beyond the head, two tracts of tawny, plumelike feathers will begin to develop. These, when fully grown, will be the so-called "horns" that give the bird its name.

These conspicuous plumes will be a measure of the bird's mood in the days to come. Erect and bristling they will be an important feature of the nuptial displays that precede pairing later in the spring and embellished with a pair of scarlet eyes they will complete the transformation of our dowdy little winter resident.

Walt Disney, in his film Marsh Birds did much to bring the spectacular courtship displays of the big black and white, western grebe to public attention, but it is not generally known that all grebes, to some extent, have similar displays. And our horned grebes are no exception.

We won't see it here on the wintering grounds but May, on many prairie potholes, will feature the head shaking, rushing to and fro along the surface of the water, standing vertically face to face, bill-touching ceremonies and the presentations of various kinds of vegetation that mark the culmination of the horned grebe's year.

Scallen Brought 'Great Benefit'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Tom Scallen, boss of the National Hockey League's Vancouver Canucks, was described by his lawyer Friday as a man with somewhat unorthodox financing methods who built a company from practically nothing into a corporation worth millions.

Lawyer Walter Williston, in his final submission to the British Columbia Supreme Court jury trying Scallen on charges of theft and issuing a false prospectus, said Scallen had conferred great benefit on Vancouver and urged the jury to acquit him on both counts.

Scallen, president of the Minneapolis-based Medical Investment Corp. (Medicor) and its Vancouver-based subsidiary, Northwest Sports Enterprises Ltd., has pleaded not guilty to stealing $3 million from Northwest and to issuing a false prospectus in an underwriting by the subsidiary in which the money is said to have been raised.

Medicor controls Vancouver Canucks through a 60-per-cent holding in Northwest Sports, the Canucks' parent company.

Mr. Williston asked the jurors not to reach a compromise verdict of guilty on one charge and not guilty on the other, adding that each is equally serious.

ACQUIRED CONTROL

Mr. Williston told the jury that Scallen, as a young lawyer, acquired control of Medicor.

At first, the defence lawyer said, the company had small assets. After Scallen acquired control it extended rapidly, essentially on Scallen's rather unorthodox method of financing.

Mr. Williston said one witness described Scallen as being almost a genius at raising money and that he never worried about borrowing large sums of money.

Mr. Williston said Scallen always believed he would be able to pay the money back and always did.

Mr. Williston, in listing the assets of Medicor, said the most important asset was Ice Follies, for which the price was $5 million.

WILLING TO BORROW

He said Scallen at times was willing to borrow money at high rates of interest. With the borrowed money, Scallen acquired an asset which earned enough to pay the interest charges and to eventually liquidate the debt.

Referring to the NHL's offer of a franchise to Vancouver, Mr. Williston said Scallen was willing to borrow $3 million to buy out the wealthy men in Canada who were not willing to make the investment.

He said Scallen paid about $3.50 a share and less than two years later Coley Hall of Vancouver offered to buy them back at more than $11 a share.

Mr. Williston said when the NHL decided to expand in 1968 by adding two more cities, Vancouver was given first priority.

"The franchise fee was fixed at $6 million. I do not propose to criticize or try to justify that," he said. "The facts are that the wealthy men who controlled Northwest at that time did not apply for the franchise."

He said that because of Scallen's connections through the ice show business and because of recommendations of two of the NHL governors, the franchise was offered to Medicor.

One of the conditions was that Scallen first buy out Northwest Sports, Mr. Williston said.

LUMBER LAW COULD HURT

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Proposed United States legislation could have a "catastrophic effect" on Canadian lumber manufacturers, the annual meeting of the northern interior section of the Council of Forest Industries (CFI) of British Columbia was told Friday.

The CFI was also warned that 30 per cent of Canadian lumber manufacturers could be forced out of business if the proposed legislation goes through.

H. A. Fierst, a registered Washington, D.C., lobbyist employed by the CFI described the proposed Burke-Hartke Tariff Bill as a "meat-axe approach that would drastically effect Canadian wood exports."

The Burke-Hartke Bill would erect protective barriers around U.S.-made products, allowing them to undercut imports on the market.

Federal Trade Minister Alastair Gillespie has said the Canadian government hopes it will not be enacted.

Fierst warned that if the bill were passed by congress, Canadian lumber exports would be cut from nine billion board feet a year to six billion feet.

"It would have a catastrophic impact on Canadian industries," said Fierst.

"This quota would not be imposed due to the demands of the marketplace but due to the demands of lawmakers," he said.

Canadian exports of lumber to the U.S. have increased from 4.5 billion board feet to nine billion board feet in the last decade and from 14.6 per cent of the U.S. wood consumption to 22 per cent in 1972 with further increases expected this year.

Fierst also predicted the U.S. will reinstate a freeze on lumber industry wages and on lumber prices for certain types of products by the end of this month.

Indian Housing Study Planned By Ministers

Three cabinet ministers will travel to the Queen Charlotte Islands soon to look at a parcel of land which the Haida Indian band wants the government to buy for housing an expanding population.

Provincial Secretary Ernest Hall said Friday Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer, Resources Minister Robert Williams and Minister without Portfolio Frank Calder will travel to Masset at the end of the current legislative session to study the housing situation in the area.

He made the announcement after the minister's Indian advisory council turned down a Haida band request for money from the First Citizens Fund to buy 1,000 acres now owned by an absentee American landlord.

The owner wants $170,000 for the land situated adjacent to the old Masset Indian village and the town of New Masset.

Hall said it was purely a federal function to provide land for housing for reserve Indians.

But, he added, the provincial government was considering buying the land itself for use as a land bank.

If the government bought the land, he said, it could lease some of it to the band for housing and use the remainder for housing for the town of New Masset.

He noted that both the village and town are in need of land for expansion.

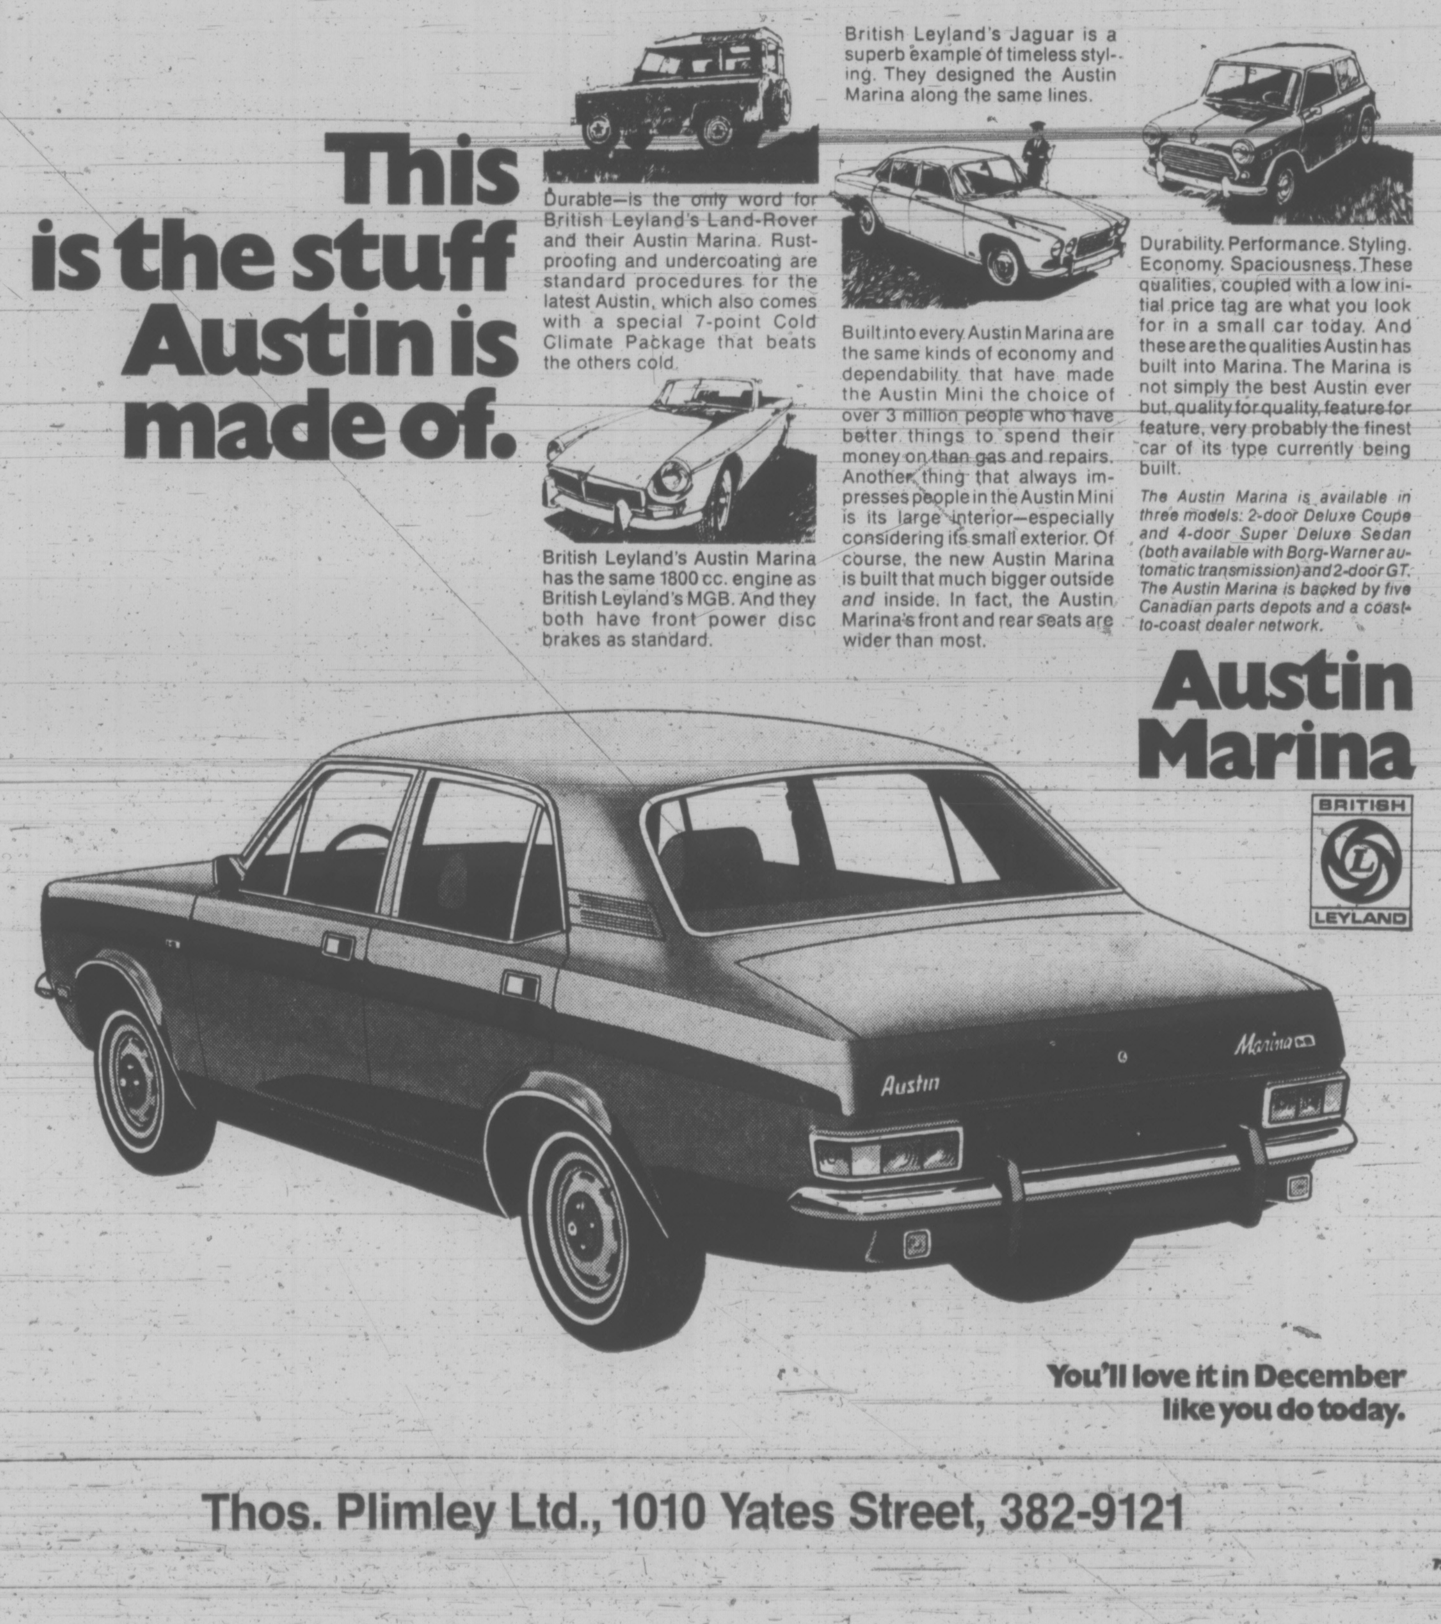
ALL ARE WELCOME



This is the stuff Austin is made of.

Durable—is the only word for British Leyland's Land-Rover and their Austin Marina. Rustproofing and undercoating are standard procedures for the latest Austin, which also comes with a special 7-point Cold Climate Package that beats the others cold.

British Leyland's Jaguar is a superb example of timeless styling. They designed the Austin Marina along the same lines.

British Leyland's Austin Marina has the same 1800 cc. engine as British Leyland's MGB. And they both have front power disc brakes as standard.

Built into every Austin Marina are the same kinds of economy and dependability that have made the Austin Mini the choice of over 3 million people who have better things to spend their money on than gas and repairs. Another thing that always impresses people in the Austin Mini is its large interior—especially considering its small exterior. Of course, the new Austin Marina is built that much bigger outside and inside. In fact, the Austin Marina's front and rear seats are wider than most.

Durability. Performance. Styling. Economy. Spaciousness. These qualities, coupled with a low initial price tag are what you look for in a small car today. And these are the qualities Austin has built into Marina. The Marina is not simply the best Austin ever but, quality for quality, feature for feature, very probably the finest car of its type currently being built.

The Austin Marina is available in three models: 2-door Deluxe Coupe and 4-door Super Deluxe Sedan (both available with Borg-Warner automatic transmission) and 2-door GT. The Austin Marina is backed by five Canadian parts depots and a coast-to-coast dealer network.

Driving Into the Future

Urban transit systems, like symphony orchestras and art galleries, are almost never self-supporting. Consequently bus systems in cities need revenue in addition to that received from fares. The result is that government at one level or another must come to the rescue. In the local situation, long a serious problem to users and governments, the deficits are met by provincial and municipal grants. In addition the local bus system carries a large load of debt accumulated over the years, the annual interest on which alone amounts to some $2.5 million.

Municipal Affairs Minister Lorimer now proposes that the transit systems of Greater Vancouver and Greater Victoria be reorganized: that they receive an infusion of new buses, new types of vehicles, new patterns of service and new financing. The provincial government will absorb the existing debt of the systems, enabling Greater Vancouver and the Capital Regional District to take over operation of urban transportation next year. The province will finance new capital expenditures and share in operating expenses.

With adequate provincial guarantees, the reluctance of the local governments to take over the transit systems no doubt will be reduced. Under Premier Bennett, the provincial government's offers were not judged to be adequate, and neither urban area has wanted to be saddled with a costly losing project. Mr. Lorimer's plan may resolve this difficulty.

But other difficulties will remain, of even more concern to the general public than finances, engrossing as that topic is. A present prediction is that within the next five years, the tradition of cars swarming into the city centre every day with only the driver or perhaps one additional passenger aboard, will have to be abandoned. The streets simply will not contain private automobile traffic above a certain maximum limit, now apparently being approached.

It is true that some arrangements can be made to postpone the day when car owners will have to leave their vehicles at home and go to town on the bus: parking facilities can be increased to free the streets of stationary cars; streets can be widened in some cases; alternative routes can be provided; arrangements such as one-way thoroughfares can be introduced. Some of these cures might destroy the environment it is sought to save. And sooner or later, the density of traffic would call for even more drastic measures.

Mr. Lorimer suggests a variety of bus services to meet this problem. Residential routes, ring routes, express runs, feeder lines and such devices, may be used. But the essential fact which will hit every car driver right away is that a full-fledged bus system of adequate proportions will have to be in proven operation well ahead of the day when cars must be left home. And this solution itself will bring problems.

Hundreds of buses will have to be added to the system, with great flexibility available for the morning and later afternoon rush hours. There will have to be sufficient minor routes to permit people to get around the town at minimum cost, making the several stops which many car drivers must make each day. The large number of additional buses may generate traffic and pollution problems of their own, which will reduce the benefits to be gained by abandoning private cars.

Much of the idea of bus-to-town-and-back is predicated on there being only one stop, at the place of employment. But many drivers use their cars several times a day within the downtown area in ways which would prove expensive and time-consuming if buses had to be used. The necessary compromise may be found in extensive parking areas set in a ring around the downtown core, to which cars could be driven in the morning, with access during the day for necessary driving such as going home for lunch, attending meetings, and other needs.

Certainly, whatever system is used, conditions are not going to be what they have been up to now. Already a taste of the future may be had in the long line-ups at traffic lights which sometimes occur in town now even during the so-called slack periods of the day. But if remedies for crowded traffic render impossible the necessary transportation service needed by city dwellers, then some even more drastic solution may be sought. Some day the size of urban concentrations may have to be regulated if the city concept itself is to remain viable.

When Mutual Friends Fall Out

In recent days Canada's External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp has again explained to Mexican President Luis Echeverria this country's stand on membership in the Organization of American States, a membership which the Mexican head of state would regard with favor. Holding observer status, as well as seats in a number of subsidiary organizations of the OAS, Canada is still reluctant to seek full membership in that body because of our relationships with other members and with the United States.

As friends of both, this country's position becomes delicate when American and Latin American interests clash — as they often do in OAS deliberations.

Full membership could, according to one argument, provide support for Canadian positions in opposition to those of the United States. On the other hand, occasional alliance with Latin American states against positions taken by Washington could reduce the generally amicable relationships between Canada and the United States. The hard choice of picking sides is not, as Ottawa sees it, a desirable diplomatic option. The thought is: why add to our problems?

Now, as the Organization of American States general assembly meets in Washington, Canada sits as an observer of what could develop into an explosive gathering.

Close on the heels of Panamanian attacks against U.S. colonialism at the U.N. session in Panama, the Americans face hostile arguments from some Latin American states on issues involving smaller nations to the south. That a growing mood of independence from U.S. influence will be exploited seems obvious.

As a mere observer, Canada can preserve a certain aloofness from such a conflict, jeopardizing friendship with neither faction, and perhaps assisting in a solution. Continued non-membership in these circumstances seems prudent — if something less than courageous.

ART STOTT

Starting With Lysistrata

The other evening, at the regular convocation of the Caspar Milquetoast Lodge, AOMCP, we got around to considering the report that a housewife should earn $8,000 a year for her domestic duties. We didn't like it. This is the provocative stuff of which broken homes can be fashioned.

So we appointed a committee to draft a resolution of condemnation, which will be forwarded to the Grand Lodge, AOMCP.

The AOMCP? That's the Ancient Order of Male Chauvinist Pigs. Our Caspar Milquetoast lodge is one of the earliest in the region — an association of good-natured, scholarly, even-tempered and loyal members banded together for mutual aid and protection against the onslaughts of the feminist movement. Philosophically, it runs back beyond the counter-revolution against the Pankhurst suffragettes to those misty days at the beginning of history when Lysistrata started all this women's lib agitation a little before 400 years B.C.

Modernized Ritual

We've modernized the ritual. When the lodge is properly tiled, we form in a circle, right hands resting on an embossed copy of "My Fair Lady", advance the left foot and stamp four times, saying "Damn, damn, damn, damn." Our Exalted Misanthrope is a little guy with a sort of tenor-soprano voice who can impersonate Professor Higgins almost as well as Rex Harrison. Then we sing three verses of "Why Can't a Woman Be More Like a Man," that basic musical question so admirably composed by Frederick Loewe and Alan Jay (or is it George Bernard?) Lerner. After that we get down to business and it's secret. We don't tell anybody, except our wives if they pester us about our discussions when we're tying to get to sleep.

However, since the $8,000 wifely wage is a public issue and our attack on it requires public support, an exception is being made.

Charlie started the ball rolling. He's good in lodge, lots of fire and the strongest advocate we have on men's rights. He looks mild enough, but ever since his wife started to make him take his shoes off before she'd let him into their living room with its white shag rug, he's been a terror as an anti-feminist when the lodge is properly tiled.

"Ridiculous," he shouted when the subject was introduced, "mean, unfair," His voice rose: "Preposterous, cowardly, insane, cunning, unreasonable. Why it strikes at the whole fabric of man's position as the provider. The whole damn thing . . ." he was saying when his voice shot up an octave, which happens sometimes with tenor sopranos.

Dan took it from there. He's pretty sound, doesn't fly off the handle, sort of establishes a balance. "Let's just look at the economics of the idea," he said. "Now if I'm going to pay my wife $8,000 a year, me and the boys at the plant are going to have to go on strike for a big wage increase. Let's see, $8,000 would be a hundred per cent raise. Don't think the brass in our outfit will go for that. We'll be on the picket lines say six-eight months and strike pay isn't all that good in our union. Not enough to produce the $8,000 anyhow. So we gotta kill this plan while it's a germ. Ounce of prevention's worth a pint of rye — I mean cure."

We hammered away at the thing for a couple of hours — and we were sore clean through. Then the tiler gave us the secret knock and we shut up, listening. We heard a feminine voice outside and it was a little dicey for a while until someone recognized it as Joe's wife. She comes and picks him up at 9:47 on lodge nights. Says he has to get home, have his hot milk and get a good night's sleep so he can be bright at the office the next day. He's bucking for a promotion. Or maybe she's the one who's bucking.

So we struck the committee and moved from labor to refreshment. That's the coffee and devilled egg sandwiches that keep the fellows awake at night. Ted looks after the refreshments. He's a druggist and let's us have a lodge discount on bicarbonate of soda.

I was sitting at the end of the table with Ben on my right. He and I joined the lodge at the same time. On my left was Jaimie. He joined later. Bill was playing the guitar and singing mournful-like, so our conversation at the table end was private.

Principle and Interest

"My wife isn't going to like this protest much, but she'll go along," Ben said. He looked carefully around to see that nobody else was listening, dropped his voice and explained: "You see, ever since we were married I've been taking my pay cheque home. I sign it. She cashes it and then gives me my allowance. It's not much, but she does the buying and household budgeting. So if she gets $8,000, she'll be taking a cut. She's not much on masculine independence, but she's less on taking an income cut. Yep, she'll go along."

Jaimie, he's recently married and hasn't found out who's the boss in his house yet, looked pretty indignant. "Why," he told Ben, "your wife's profiteering. Why don't you stand up for your rights?"

Ben gave him a sort of sorrowful smile and explained: "I've done that before. Somehow it makes the old girl so depressed her cooking seems to fall off. You ever try a steady diet of those soyabean compound dinners? No? Well, stand up for your rights, Jaimie, but don't push it so hard she won't let you come to lodge. You get so you need your freedom here once every couple of weeks. For a while at least you can be an AOMCP."

MAURICE WESTERN

Government on a Tightrope

OTTAWA — The country, it is often suggested, is merely bored by the procedural debates in which members of Parliament engage. They are occasionally, however, of major importance and may constitute a serious danger to a Government in a minority in the House of Commons.

Two such debates were foreshadowed in some preliminary observations offered on Wednesday by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux. Both will arise from motions of concurrence in reports of committees presented to the House. The problem for the Government is that it does not control these committees and lacks the manpower to defeat embarrassing motions which it cannot sidetrack by successful procedural argument.

To one of these motions, arising from the first report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices, the procedural objection is obvious. In its final paragraph, the committee departed from the usual pattern of such reports, recommending that the department of consumer affairs make specific monies available to consumer groups. While there is no doubt that Parliament can refuse sums to the executive, it should not direct the executive to spend more or to enact legislation.

Aboriginal Title

There may be the same objection to one of two recommendations from the Indian affairs committee, a motion which has to do with funding the research efforts of nonstatus Indians and Metis. Far more threatening to the Government than either of these, however, is another recommendation which is probably much less vulnerable on procedural grounds.

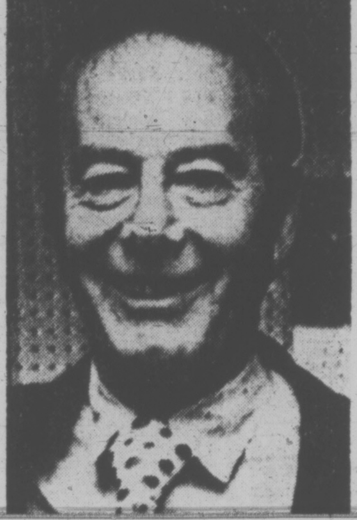
On March 29, by a vote of 11 to one — with five significant abstentions — the following motion was passed:

"That this Committee report to the House that it accepts and endorses the concept of Aboriginal Title as more fully set out in the paper entitled "Aboriginal Title" presented to the committee by Mr. George Manuel, President of the National Indian Brotherhood . . . and urges the Prime Minister, on behalf of the Government of Canada, to publicly accept and endorse the said concept of Aboriginal Title, and to take steps immediately to enter into negotiations with the Indian people with respect to the said title."

As the Prime Minister might or might not accept such urging, this would not directly involve the expenditure of public funds.

In fact, the Government has taken a very important step in this direction by agreeing to negotiate with the Yukon Native Brotherhood. The Nishgas of British Columbia also received a favorable reception, following the judgment written by Mr. Justice Hall in the Supreme Court. But the Government, up to the present, has not committed itself in regard to the general question.

There is no mystery about the Government's difficulty. When the resolution, moved by Flora MacDonald and amended (to add the immediate steps) by Frank Howard, was before the committee on March 29, Liberal members immediately voiced concern about its possible implications for the James Bay development. There were other objections having to do with timing but this was the argument of substance to emerge at that time.



YVON L'HEUREUX
. . . project comes first

Thus Yvon L'Heureux of Chambly stated: "Since I have been attending this Committee's meetings, I have noticed that James Bay is often spoken about. I find that, at the present time, in Quebec, there are rather large problems. This is a provincial government project which aims at giving a boost to the Quebec economy. It does seem that efforts are being made to have this James Bay project blocked. At the present time it is before the courts. I should very much like the Indian's rights to be respected; however, on condition that this project be carried out because I think it is most important."

After arguing that the 6,000 Indians of the territory would not be deprived of much, Mr. L'Heureux concluded: "Therefore, if you tell me that this will affect the project, either indirectly or directly, I will be forced to vote against it."

Remarks of Florian Cote, a Liberal from Richelieu, are less clear but point in the same direction. When the chairman, Judd Buchanan — also a Liberal — read a paragraph noting that the obligation to deal with Indian claims is placed by the constitution on the federal Government, Mr. Cote observed rather mysteriously:

Early Rights

"Yes, but you are aware that rights were granted to Quebec and Ontario by the British Government. Does this mean that Quebec and Ontario can pass the buck and say that neither of them has any jurisdiction?"

Later he observed of the brief that "the rights, as expressed here, are quite sensible except for a few details regarding Quebec and Ontario." He finally abstained, saying that: "we had to do things too fast."

With the Liberal members, other than Mr. L'Heureux, abstaining and a Quebec Social Crediter also declining to vote, the resolution developed by Conservatives and New Democrats was carried by the Opposition. It is politically dangerous for the Government because the effect is to push the federal Liberals on to a path which would bring them into collision with Mr. Bourassa and the Quebec provincial Liberals.

But how is this to be avoided when a motion of concurrence can be carried by the same parties in the House of Commons?

It is highly probable that the Government, in these circumstances, will try through procedural objections to derail the resolution. In form the argument will be about precedents, forms of words, and the proper role of committees in relation to the House. But the reality will be the situation at James Bay which remains a heavy cloud over the Government's future, as it has been ever since the first days of the minority Parliament.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

FREEMAN KING

It is pollen time again for the Douglas firs. Some trees will not have the pollen cones since this year fewer are appearing and the trees with flowers are scattered.

Look on the twigs and you will find many tiny, reddish, bud-like appendages. These are the male flowers and on the underside will be the female flowers. The pistilates will be erect and possibly flaming red and yellow-green trident-like bracts. They shed their pollen about the first 10 days or so of April and the pollen is carried by the wind.

At first the female flower's staminates are shorter and duller and do not appear so prominent. They too will be erect yet once they are fertilized they turn, become pendant and gradually take the form of the well-known three-pronged bract cone that we all can recognize.

The cones mature in one year and often will stay on the tree for two or more years before dropping off. The seeds are "naked" and have a single wing. The cones grow on the limbs even if they are close to the ground. Seeds from the larger, lower branches will grow in the open where they can get the sunlight at all times.

In the plant's process of reproduction the speck of protoplasm within the pollen grain finds its way to the minute amount of protoplasm enclosed in the ovule of the female part of the flower.

This tiny bit of plant is without chlorophyll, thus it cannot work for a living. It has no reserve of food stored within itself. It is not even a seed nor yet a part of a seed. Its life is very short — some a few hours or maybe a few days. Yet without this wonderful pollen grain we would not have our flowers, trees, our garden produce or even the grasses of the meadows that give mankind most of our life.

Pollen time means a new generation, new life for the future, new beauty that our eyes may see and enjoy.

And for this everlasting life on the earth we depend upon many things — the winds, insects, birds and even some of the mammals that help distribute the golden grains of pollen.

Even the seaweeds and the fungi depend upon the same process, though in somewhat different pattern.

Each species of plant has its own time of year to carry out its function of pollination.

Lodge Hours

It's a wonder to me and others who are in the veterans' Hospital that we cannot go over to the Red Cross Lodge like we used to do, and have coffee or tea and be able to take our friends. It closes now at 4:30 p.m. Also our canteen is closed every day at 4:30 and not open Saturday or Sunday.

Mrs. Cook in charge of the lodge says she cannot get help — it's all volunteers. When Mrs. Osborne was alive and running the place she could always get lots of help and she sure looked after the old and new vets. There are lots of old vets in the hospital who have to stay the rest of their lives. Now the vets of the Second World War are coming.

When the Red Cross asks for help we do our best and always have. — One Old Vet in Both Wars.

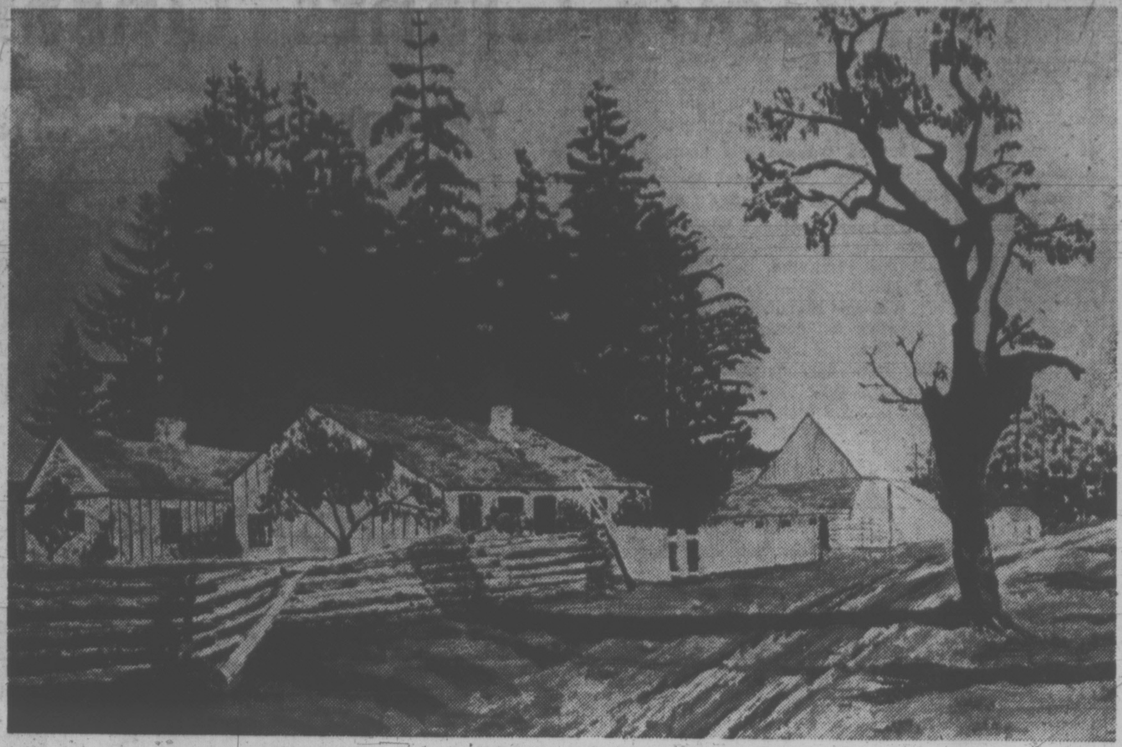
Flowers Of Spring Remain

By JAMES McCOOK



Craigflower Farm . . . men were moved to eloquent praise

Victoria's spring 130 years ago delighted white men for the first time.

The long search for a fort site had ended and Camosun — The Place for Gathering Lilies — pleased Chief Factor James Douglas and his fellow-traders. It had a good harbor, fresh water, fertile land and wood for buildings.

It had scenic beauty, too. That was more important to the leathery frontiersmen than might be expected. When the Beaver anchored on March 14, 1843 in Shoal Bay the people aboard agreed that the view was "enchanting." On an earlier visit Douglas had satisfied himself that the soil produced abundance of grass, and "several varieties of red clover grow on the rich moist bottoms."

On March 15 while exploring the harbor area Douglas noted that the weather was "beautifully clear" and on March 16 added, "The gooseberry bushes growing in the woods beginning to bud."

Many of the traders had served at Fort Vancouver, 100 miles up the Columbia River from the coast, where fruit and vegetable crops flourished in a mild climate. But most of them also were veterans of the extremes of heat and cold at prairie and sub-Arctic posts of the Hudson's Bay Company. The most comfortless post of all, in the opinion of Governor George Simpson, was Fort McLeod on McLeod's Lake, north of the present Prince George. At the lonely establishment starvation was a familiar companion.

Having put men to work building Fort Victoria, Douglas sailed north to remove stores and men from Forts McLoughlin and Taku, which were being closed. Charles Ross, left in charge of construction, later reported that from June to November "we had scarcely anything else, than bright sunny days!" He sounds as pleased as later settlers who found winter came slowly.

The Indians who provided wood for the stockades knew Camosun as a place of flowers. Whether they appreciated blooms is not recorded but they considered camas roots such a treat that they went to the trouble of cooking them in pits, drying them and storing them for feasts. Digging with a pointed stick for bulbs was tedious work but worth it. "Death camas" roots which were poisonous when green were rejected by watchful old women.

The Fort Victoria garden was put in operation quickly. Thrifty Governor Simpson had accused Pacific Coast traders, in the days before the North West and Hudson's Bay companies united, of "eating gold" by importing luxuries. He said they should grow more potatoes and catch more salmon. He commended gardening, rather than drinking wines and demanding white tablecloths, as an exercise for gentlemen of the fur trade.

Douglas enjoyed gardening, not only for vegetables but for flowers as well. When he had settled in at Fort Victoria the garden received his attention. Seven years after the fort was founded, the flowers did him credit. In 1850 James Anderson, then eight years old, arrived at the fort from the interior where his father, A. C. Anderson, was a chief trader. In old age, after becoming British Columbia's first deputy minister of agriculture, he remembered the garden outside the stockade and across a road.

It was "redolent with the perfume of mignonette, stock and wallflower, and gay with eschscholtzia (poppy), mallow, hollyhock, marigold, candytuff, Sweet William and other of the old-fashioned flowers."

With other children in the Staines' school, living under spartan conditions, James Anderson had to help weed and thin the garden, in accord with the HBC rule that everyone within a fort must perform whatever task was within his capacity.

The hard treatment received by the youngsters was indicated by the fact that when the boys saw a man in the fort being flogged for an offence they did not consider it cruel. They were accustomed to floggings from their master.

The wife of the chief factor gave young James Anderson an apple supposed to have been grown from seed taken to Fort Vancouver from England. He had never seen one before and did not care for it very much.

Victoria moved men to eloquent praise.

When Douglas' daughter, Martha, went to Britain he poured out his heart in affectionate letters to her. Once he wrote of a morning in James Bay:

"The air is fragrant with the sweets exhaled by the wild rose, now blooming in countless abundance. It is indeed delightful to wander about, amid the beauty and wild luxuriance of nature — so far surpassing in grace the utmost efforts of art."

The stern old disciplinarian added:

"The sweet litttle robin is pouring out his heart in melody, making the welkin ring with his morning song of praise and thanksgiving. Would that we were equally grateful to the Author of all good."

The old man used to tell his son-in-law, Dr. J. S. Helmcken, how he had been enamored by his first exploration of Beacon Hill and James Bay.

There was more to life than trade, Empire and authority.

Among the first residents of the Victoria area were retired traders such as John Tod, who had his farm at Oak Bay and, a tireless talker, eagerly recounted the hardships he endured in nine years' exile at Fort McLeod because he had offended Simpson. Tod and his cronies would speak of Labrador Tea, found in the Barrens, which smelled like rhubarb when boiled; it did not fill the stomach but it gave a sense of comfort and helped wash down roasted moccasins when times were very hard.

In their judgment plants had to be useful first and pretty afterwards.

They knew the taste of bitterroot, the scent of sweet grass scattered on fires and the beauty of fields of lupins. The buds of wild roses were eaten in emergency, flax provided medicinal oils, fireweed healed wounds and a mountain ash planted beside a barn protected animals from evil.

The skills of gardening and appreciation of flowers brought from Britain, the United States and Eastern Canada flourished in Victoria but the fur-traders lived to see the first Chinese go to work, all of them with green thumbs .

The old frontiersmen soon recognized the debt of beauty Victoria owed the Chinese gardeners.

The country has changed, the noble oaks of Cadboro Bay have vanished along with many valleys filled with clover. But the flowers remain, so that in Spring, as Douglas said long ago, "the eye of the spectator is continually delighted with the varied beauties just bursting into existence."

Time to Change Oil Search Rules

By PETER DESBARATS

OTTAWA — Andrew Thompson is a law professor at the University of British Columbia, not a revolutionary. He has a healthy respect for private rights. He believes that it would go against Canadian tradition to change the private rights acquired by oil companies operating under federal permits in the Arctic and offshore regions. Except under unusual circumstances.

He now believes that the circumstances are exceptional.

That is the pivot of a position that Thompson outlined last month at a special seminar of the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee, a relatively new but already influential citizens' lobby on Arctic development.

After the economic and legal questions have been analyzed, Thompson steps back from the technical maze, takes a deep breath of fresh air and makes a radical assertion: "Extraordinary changes in national consciousness about resources, and particularly about energy, have produced exceptional circumstances of the kind that justify changes."

In other words, Canadians have acquired a new perspective on resource development. They are asking questions and demanding answers, even if it means changing a few rules that have been considered sacrosanct up to now. Is resource development automatically good? Who really benefits from it? And the basic question posed by Eric Kierans in his recent report on resources policy for the Manitoba government: "Does so much have to be given away for so little?"

The phenomenon described by Kierans, a former federal cabinet minister, is a corporate rip-off of heroic dimensions. It is the nightmare side of the great Canadian dream.

Kierans sees the fabulous natural wealth of Canada being sucked dry by a small number of giant corporations. The touted benefits of employment and development are described as myths. The Eldorados of the future portrayed by corporate publicity are revealed to be mirages as governments find themselves trapped in a process of diminishing returns.

The claims Kierans makes about resources policy in Manitoba apply to all provinces. To some degree, according to Kierans, their future development has already been compromised by past mistakes. Now Thompson is taking Kierans' thesis and applying it to the newest areas of resource development: the oil and gas reserves of the Arctic and offshore regions. He is finding there "a resource giveaway unparalleled in any country in modern times."

Like Kierans, Thompson has credentials that command respect. For more than four years he has been following up his belief that "the most important provisions in the petroleum laws, from the public point of view, are those which deal with the duration of permits and leases and the entrenchment of royalty rates."

"If these are made excessively long," he warned a parliamentary committee in December, 1968, "there will be public hostility and charges of monopoly, of undue exploitation and of a sell-out of resources."

Today Thompson claims that this is exactly what has happened. More than 80 per cent of the Arctic and offshore oil and gas territories are covered by regulations that give oil companies what Thompson describes as long, cheap leases. In some cases, commitments extend into the next century. Thompson compares them with other governments' leases in Alaska, Australia, and the North Sea, and finds them "entirely deficient."

"The petroleum revenues foregone under the present system amount to hundreds of millions of dollars," he says. "They are of the order required to settle native claims and provide an economic base for the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

"In the Maritime provinces and Quebec, they can mean economic resurgence."

One of Thompson's central points is that the deals made in the past have been inadequate because they have been negotiated behind closed doors by government and the oil industry.

STATIC COMING FROM THE SOUTH

THE GLOBE AND MAIL
An Editorial

There seems to be evidence lately, in and around the White House, of a desire to convince Canadians that hewing wood and drawing water (or oil) are respectable occupations with which they should be contented. Certain United States spokesmen have been seeing Canada's ambitions to put its own natural gas and oil needs first, to exert greater control over foreign industry operating here, to expand the job-rich secondary industry section of our economy, as expressions of an overwrought and parochial patriotism that is most reprehensible. Jingoism and chauvinism, some have called it.

Certainly, the last few years have seen anti-Americanism in full flower among some of our people; but most Canadians have not been affected. They recognize many good things in the United States: its unparalleled international generosity, its technological brilliance, the warmth of its people. But among its many resources and abilities, these Canadians also recognize the occasional U.S. talent of using loudmouths to try to obliterate reason with sound.

There was Senator Vance Hartke telling us that the auto pact is "a form of foreign aid" to Canada from the United States. There was John B. Connally, former U.S. Treasury Secretary, telling us that Canadian-U.S. trade relations are not progressing as they should and that "the day is long past when we should begin to tear down barriers" and start the move toward complete free trade.

There was President Richard Nixon's Council on International Economic Policy wrapping the threat up more ponderously: "With Canada, our largest trading partner, we have had a deteriorating trade balance since 1965, in part because of the U.S.-Canadian automobile agreement, but more importantly because we are growing more dependent on Canadian oil and other raw materials." There was the same council complaining about Canadian government efforts to persuade U.S. industry "to move some of their production facilities to Canada" and "to establish a reviewing authority to screen new foreign direct investment".

There was U.S. public policy analyst Herman Kahn telling us: "Canada is not doing the United States a favor by selling its resources;" and lesser recent lights flatly warning us that it would be dangerous for a small country like ours to become aggressive with one the size of the United States.

Few Canadians are swayed by such tactics. They are not based on the true facts of the situation.

If there is foreign aid involved in the auto pact for either country, it is for the United States. Only in 1970 and 1971 did Canada have surpluses under the pact; last year, by U.S. admission, we were back in the red; over the seven-year life of the agreement, Canada is in deficit $1.9-billion.

Canada has had trade surpluses with the United States, but in the total of our cross-border dealing (including such things as dividends, royalties, travel) we are constantly in deficit.

Noisy U.S. spokesmen sound as though they are revving up to put us down; but most responsible Americans will see the facts as plainly as we do.

The Decadent Age of Beef

RUSSELL BAKER

Nobody who remembers the Depression of the 1930s will be impressed by the heroism of boycotting meat for a single week.

During all the years of that era, there must have been one or two pieces of beef in my life but it has left no imprint on my memory.

Canned salmon, on the other hand, remains vivid in memory after almost 40 years. It must have been ridiculously cheap then—10 or 11 cents for a big can. It now costs 10 times as much, as does chipped beef, another staple of the depression diet.

With chipped beef gravy one night and fried salmon cakes another, we were eating fairly well, the meat boycotters might say. We certainly thought so. We did not even feel deprived on the third night when the main course was macaroni and cheese.

Chicken was the luxury meal at our house as in a great many households of the time, and this treat was invariably served on Sunday. Sunday was the day for noble dining and most of us who were children then probably grew up believing that when some fancy writer referred to "a Lucullan feast," he was talking abut chicken, mashed potatoes, gravy and peas.

The chicken was always either fried or roasted. Fried was best. Roasted meant it was going to be leathery, and the elders at the table who remembered the glorious eating of the 1920's would make jokes about its being rooster.

Looking back, one realizes that they may not have been joking, that the leathery fowls really may have been rooster, but there was so much joking at that table — joking with gaiety in it and not the embittered undercurrent which distinguishes the humor of our present age of decadence — that in remembering the period one hears laughter everywhere.

That is a mystery still. It was such a bad time. What were they laughing about? Yet we heard it. They had one foot in the serene stability of the Edwardian Age and the other in the mess of 1914-1929. They had been badly wrenched out of one time into another, but with nothing really damaged much. Perhaps their survival had left them permanently delighted.

Our children will probably not, at 40 and 50, hear us laughing in their memories. Oh, we are a glum bunch! Where did it come from, that glumness of ours that already echoes from our children's music and in the mission of moral uplift to which so many have already dedicated themselves?

Those are deep questions, and on the theory that a deep question deserves a frivolous answer, I would suggest that the gloom we exude comes not from our Depression childhoods, but from our turning in early adulthood into a generation of beef eaters.

This beef madness began during the Second World War when richly fatted beef was forced fed into every putative American warrior. Meat 21 meals a week was the formula for beating the Axis, although the men who really did the job, of curse, were living on good old Depression foods, like Spam, while they were at work.

After the war there was no tapering off. We had become a nation of beef-a-holics. By the 1950's the smell of barbecued beef hung like smog over 100,000 suburbs. A social crisis was no longer your relief cheque's failure to arrive before the rent was due, but the arrival of a steak cooked medium rare when you had ordered it rare.

This was not a crisis met with a gay smile on the lips, and a joke. Tension prevailed over the table. One was aware that his manhood had been challenged by the chef. Did one dare to threaten nuclear retaliation by demanding to see the manager? Would one lose face if . . .

"One? We all sweated. It was the age of sweating. When people were relaxed, which was rare, they acknowledged it by saying, "no sweat." and beef, and all those other meats every day of the year — they kept us sweating, and grim.

Nowadays if you want to hear laughter, you must think of macaroni and cheese and listen very carefully, and it may — just may, mind you — come dimly through the beef-clotted memory.

Gov't Grants 'Unsatisfactory'

Williams Urges Change

Per capita grants to municipalities by the provincial government are not a satisfactory form of financial assistance and an alternative must be found, Allan Williams (L—West Vancouver-Howe Sound) told the Legislature Friday.

Williams said the per capita formula for determining and fulfilling need is an easy one to use, but in practice it doesn't work to the greatest public good because it fails to take account of the special and very serious problems of large urban centres.

In cities the economic, sociological and other problems increase at a greater rate than the population increases, he said, and there should be recognition of this by the provincial government.

He also expressed the hope that some day municipalities will have some other basis of tax revenue than simply the ownership of property.

Williams was speaking during debate on the principle of amendments to the Municipalities Aid Act, which will raise the per capita grants $2 to $32.

Noting a comment by Premier Dave Barrett, that the measure will cost the province another $4 million a year, Williams said that benefit to the municipalities was effectively cancelled out by increases in social assistance rates announced earlier this week — which will cost them $4 million.

"So we're just back to where we were," he said.

In closing the debate, Barrett agreed the per capita grants reflect a "paternalistic attitude" on the part of the provincial government, but he wondered what other system could replace them.

Conservative house leader Scott Wallace said the grant increase is inadequate and his party would support the move only as an interim measure until the government announces a fairer deal for municipalities.

Also amendments to the provincial home-owner grant act increase the grant to $200 a year from $185 for those who are not senior citizens and to $250 from $235 to those 65 years of age and older.

Legislation amending the assessment equalization act was also given approval in principle. This would limit the current 10 per cent annual assessment increase on property to farm and residential property.

Alcohol Gets Blame For Breaking Law

Eight people, all, pleading guilty to separate offences in provincial court, blamed alcohol for their lawbreaking.

Jana Vichova, 22, of West Vancouver, told Judge E. F. N. Robinson today she had been "celebrating" her recent birthday when she was picked up in the Bay on a shoplifting charge.

The woman said she had "forgotten" the $5 belt security men found under her arm. She was given a suspended sentence and placed on four months' probation by Robinson.

Kevin William Parks, 24, of no fixed address, was fined $75 for assault by trespass, after police forcibly removed the man, in a drunken condition, from a Yates Street restaurant.

Four other men were each fined $50 in separate downtown disturbances Friday and this morning.

Michael Atkins, of Vancouver, pleaded guilty to causing a disturbance by swearing at police officers on Broad early today. Eugene William Mathe, 59, of no fixed address, was helped out of Centennial Square Friday afternoon by police following complaints.

During the Friday night rush hour, Kenneth Dixon, of 777 Fort, was picked up by police, as cars stopped to avoid him on Fort. Sean Michael McDonald, 24, of 2573 Florence, was taken to police headquarters, after complaints that he was urinating on the sidewalk on Broad early today.

David James Brunt, 42, of the Eastern Hotel, was given 30 days in jail for causing a disturbance Friday afternoon on Broad, James Patrick Ckarke, of no fixed address, got 20 days after police found him "rolling" along the sidewalk on Government.

Lynx Smuggler Prosecuted

CHUR, Switzerland (AP) — A World Wildlife Fund official has been fined $130 for smuggling a pair of lynx into Switzerland's National Park. Anton Toresch, president of the Lake Constance section of the fund, was found guilty of violating Swiss hunting laws forbidding the release of game extinct in Switzerland.

'Don't Ignore Bridge'

Widening the Bay Street Bridge probably ranks last on the city of Victoria's list of priorities, but that will have to be changed, Ald. Percy Frampton said Friday.

"We just can't continue ignoring the matter," said Frampton.

"I also don't think it's right to forget about widening the bridge just because it's mostly used by people from the other municipalities."

Traffic department statistics show more than 70 per cent of the traffic using the bridge comes from or goes to Saanich, Esquimalt and Oak Bay.

Traffic on the Bay Street Bridge has reached its "practical capacity," said traffic engineer Dave Campbell. Present use of the bridge is 15,000 vehicles a day, he said.

State of Emergency After Big Drought

GUATEMALA (AP) — Two of the five Central American countries have declared states of national emergency as a result of the area's worst drought in 50 years.

Costa Rica and Honduras declared states of emergency this week. Nicaragua, in a national emergency since the devastating Dec. 23 earthquake, had serious financial problems because of drought long before the quake struck.

Lighter than usual rainfall during last year's rainy season left water tables below their normal levels. The situation became acute as the region entered its current dry season, which normally lasts until May.

The drought has affected production of basic grains and other farm products which have had to be supplied by import. The result has been an increase in the cost of living for the area's 12 million inhabitants.

In many areas drinking water is rationed.

COSTA RICA

Probably the hardest hit by the drought. Rivers that supply hydro-electric plants are low and electricity is cut off 12 hours a day.

Companies were authorized to give employes an extra week of vacation at Easter to reduce electrical consumption.

Cattle have been moved from dry zones or exported. Authorities also expect to ration drinking water.

Preliminary estimates place daily losses due to the drought at $1.4 million.

EL SALVADOR

Basic crops affected. Factories changed shifts and vacations extended to conserve electricity. Drinking water is rationed.

HONDURAS

Water is rationed in many areas. Rivers are 50 per cent below their normal levels. Emergency wells were drilled to provide water for cereals and pastures, and the government says livestock will suffer the worst losses from the drought.

GUATEMALA

Water is rationed in the capital. Prices of basic grains increased and the government imported corn and beans to be sold at low prices to the public. Rivers and lakes are low.

NICARAGUA

Grain production, except for rice, reduced. Drinking water is scarce in some parts of the country. The level of water for the Central American hydro-electric plant, which provides electricity for the entire country, is low.

3,000 Residents Die of Cancer

Three thousand British Columbia residents die of cancer each year, and 6,500 new cases of the disease are recorded annually, according to Canadian Cancer Society statistics.

"A great deal of progress has been made over the years in preventative measures and in treatment techniques," said W. Stanley Moore, campaign chairman of the Greater Victoria unit of the Canadian Cancer Society.

"But medical research must continue its relentless search for causes and cures," he continued.

The society is trying to raise $800,000 in B.C. during its month - long fund-raising campaign.

"More and more people are getting the 'prevention' message — such as the anti-smoking campaign, the 'don't overexpose' in sunlight and certain industrial hazards," he said.

People are gradually realizing the importance of early detection as well, said Moore.

"There is ample evidence that progress is being made against cancer, but there is a long battle ahead," he said.

Contributions to the campaign may be mailed or taken to the cancer society's office at 857 Caledonia Ave. Esquimalt residents should mail donations to Campaign Office, c/o 1105 Esquimalt Rd.

Long-Time Resident Dies

Kathleen Hamber, sister of the late Eric W. Hamber who was lieutenant - governor of B.C. from 1936 to 1941, died Thursday in Royal Jubileee Hospital.

Miss Hamber, a 60-year-resident of Victoria, lived for more than 20 years in the Cherry Bank Hotel.

She leaves her nephew Eric C. Hamber and her sister-in-law Mrs. Eric W. Hamber, both of Vancouver. Funeral services will be held in McCall Brothers Floral Chapel Tuesday at 2:45 p.m., followed by interment at Royal Oak Burial Park.

Flexibility in Law Necessary

• YOUR TAXES •

By I. H. ASPER

One of the toughest jobs facing any justice minister is that of choosing the best men to fill the judicial roles in the nation's courts and, having found them, being able to persuade them to become judges.

After accomplishing that, the minister and the community served by the courts must hope that the judges who interpret the law will grow as the community grows, and that the interpretation they give to the law always stays consistent with the changing attitudes and values of society in general.

This phenomenon — the changing of judicial rulings to match society's progress — is most clearly seen in the criminal law where what would clearly have brought a conviction for obscenity 10 years ago is no longer even brought to the courts because society's attitudes have relaxed.

Just as it is important socially that the courts float with the times in criminal law, it is equally important that the tax court judges keep abreast of changing business techniques so that their interpretation of the tax law will not impair our place barriers in the path of healthy economic activity.

In this respect, for the most part, judicial interpretations of the tax law, as applied to business transactions, have in the past two or three years become much more positive.

Although there are still too few tax judges who have a pre-bench intimacy with the techniques of doing business, there appears in recent years a trend toward a more open and less literal approach to the tax laws as it applies to business transactions.

A recent ruling by the trial division of the federal court illustrates the point. The case involved a Toronto housing developer who made a financing arrangement which some might consider unique, but not if they understand the trends in that industry.

The developer began a project for which he thought he'd arranged adequate financing. In mid-stream it began to appear he wasn't adequately covered. The developer went to another financier, Traders Realty Ltd., to negotiate interim funds to carry him through.

The developer agreed to pay nine per cent interest on all money borrowed, plus a bonus equal to one per cent of gross rental receipts from the rental project for 25 years, plus sell to Traders five per cent of the project for a nominal sum.

Not an uncommon deal in Toronto real estate financing circles.

As things turned out, the developer had been overly cautious. He didn't really need the money so in due course he borrowed the money from a bank and paid off the Traders loan.

However, because of the accommodation Traders had given him, although the developer was spared the interest cost, he still was committed to pay the one per cent of gross rents for 25 years.

Then the tax fun began. As the developer paid Traders the one per cent gross rent, Traders dutifully reported it as income and paid tax on it.

Similarly, the developer claimed it as a deduction from his income.

Not so, cried the sometimes over-zealous revenue department officials. They took the position that while the receipt of the show of rent by Traders was income which should be taxed, the payment by the developer was a capital payment, not a business expense like interest, and therefore not deductible.

This heads-I-win-tails-you-lose syndrome is not entirely without precedent in the tax law. Indeed, there is considerable precedent for the proposition where double tax is levied on the same money.

In this case, the department argued that the payment was not interest on money which the taxpayer had borrowed to earn income, in which case it would be deductible, but rather was a capital payment, like a bonus, and therefore not a deductible business expense.

In the Federal Court, the case-experienced eye of Mr. Justice Ibson quickly swept over the total transaction and concluded that a rose by any other name is still a rose.

He looked at the substance of what had occurred and ruled that while the annual one per cent of gross rents payment wasn't interest expense, it was a payment of the taxpayer's income, not his capital, and was therefore deductible.

The case ended happily for all because the developer got the appropriate deduction and the financier paid the tax. Because of the increasing complexity of doing business and the infinite variety of techniques of financing business, the tax law and particularly those who enforce and those who interpret it are going to have to become considerably more flexible in their approach.

This case is a good example of the kind of flexibility required.

Street Wooing Small Investor

NEW YORK (CP) — The small investor is turning his back on the stock market and Wall street is worried.

Despite a booming economy, the individual investor just isn't buying. He has found it safer to sock his money into savings accounts or bond funds where he can depend on a return of at least five per cent a year with little or no risk.

As a result, stock market prices are slumping, volume is down, brokerage house profits are falling and the prices of many stocks are at or near their book value or record lows.

Despite a brief sharp rally last week, the Dow-Jones industrial average is down more than 120 points from its high of 1,057 in January. A seat on the New York Stock Exchange recently sold for $95,000, a $14-year low and down $420,000 from the record price of $515,000 four years ago.

An estimated 800,000 investors have pulled out of the market in the last few months and Wall street is looking for ways to entice them back. In 1972, 32.5 million Americans owned shares. That figure now is down to 31.7 million.

SMALL TRADES COSTLY

Brokers concede that the individual investor has been "alienated." Commission charges for small trades have gone up as much as 47 per cent in the last two years, making it more and more difficult for such individuals to turn a profit, while those for institutions and large block traders have fallen sharply.

Heads of firms listed on the markets are so concerned about the trend that more than 250 of them met in a series of meetings this week in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles to form an organization to woo investors back into the market.

The organization is known as the Committee of Publicly Owned Companies and its aim is to bring about changes in the securities markets so as to restore individual investor participation.

The market value of Amex stocks has dropped 20 per cent since dec. 31, 1968, while volume has fallen more than 42 per cent.

The New York Stock exchange has fared better. Its volume is running less than 10 per cent behind last year's record total, though prices are down.

Trade in the over-the-counter market in the first quarter of this year is off nearly 25 per cent from the corresponding period of 1972.

Benson works one of his trash mashers

Plant Moves To Money

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — President Russ Benson of Benson Industries Ltd. keeps a crushed tin can on his otherwise spotless desk as a reminder of past tribulations and of good things to come.

The can was the first item to go through his company's rabco solid waste shredder-compactor unit.

"Some day I'm going to have that can mounted and gold-plated," said Benson.

Previously head of a company that manufactured hospital supplies and equipment, Mr. Benson began four years ago to develop a machine to shred and compact solid waste. His primary targets are hospitals in Canada and the United States, which use as much disposable material and equipment as posible.

Two years and $250,000 later he had a working unit. The next problem was marketing the compactor on an ecology-conscious continent already glutted with a wide array of the devices.

One of the first takers was the Hotel Vancouver which got a unit two years ago that compacts three tons of trash a day "and paid for itself in seven months," Benson said.

With a rapidly expanding potential market for his compactors, Benson says the biggest problem he has faced is raising enough capital to increase his plant facilities.

"The local brokers told us to go back east if we wanted to sell shares — they were quite frank about it," he said.

"They said the B.C. investor is interested only in investing in a moose pasture with a hole in it, they said no one was interested in local secondary industry. We thought they were wrong, but we found out the hard way they were right, so we've gone east."

The company president said the federal government helped him out with a development loan and in his participation in trade fairs — but he never heard from British Columbia's former Social Credit administration and has yet to hear from the NDP government.

"The complete lack of support from the public and the government is the biggest obstacle to setting up a secondary industry here."

Now, he's being forced to consider relocating his entire operation somewhere in eastern Canada because of its proximity to major markets, freight rates and higher labor costs in B.C.

"The way things are going now, it's a logical step."

The one-ton unit, which costs $6,000 to $7,000 installed, has two major parts — a slowly revolving steel drum with steel teeth that comb the trash through the teeth where it is smashed, shredded and pushed into a container in which it is compressed.

Benson Industries went from a gross of $78,000 in 1970-71 to $170,000 in 1971-72 and $141,000 in the first two months of the current fiscal year.

The company has working agreements with Ingram and Bell of Don Mills, Ont., awarding distribution rights for all U.S. and Canadian hospitals and with Lamson Engineering Australia Ltd. for rights in Australia and New Zealand.

Mr. Benson is negotiating similar distribution agreements with companies in Britain, South Africa, Japan, Sweden and Thailand. And in conjunction with a Toronto engineering firm, his company is developing a compactor 10 times as powerful as his original unit for use at land fill disposal sites.

New Boating Ramps Eyed for Saanich

Two new boat launching sites are recommended in a planning department survey of Saanich tidal waters from Ten-Mile Point north to the municipal boundary beyond Sayward Beach.

The May meeting of council's outdoor recreation committee is expected to discuss the report with a view to opening new ramps next year.

Meanwhile, there are other decisions to be made, including land acquisition for adequate trailer and vehicle parking near the proposed sites.

The report by staff under municipal planner Tom Loney says the surge in small boat ownership has led to a scarcity of moorage accommodation at marinas.

Saanich, with about 13 miles of coastline, has no public boat launching facilities for trailer-size vessels on its eastern shore.

There are several potential ramp sites along this stretch, but the fact of strong tidal action prevents some from ever being developed as such.

Planner Kees Van Westen surveyed the area and came up with seven suitable sites of which two meet the criteria established by those with experience in the field. They are at Telegraph Cove at the foot of Telegraph Bay Road, and at Gordon Point below Vantreight Road.

The outdoor recreation committee, which tabled the report at its last meeting, asked only for sites to be identified without going into such factors as land requirements and construction costs.

Other agencies have identified criteria of boat ramps as including:

Sufficient nearby parking space, a minimum of two acres.

A relatively level approach from a public thoroughfare.

Stable soil base for the ramp itself.

Both the suggested sites are well protected from heavy seas and winds and have reasonably sloping access.

Reference was also made to the inland waters of Saanich-Gorge waterway, Prospect Lake and Beaver-Elk lakes.

It was judged that Prospect Lake is too small to support high speed recreational boating, but is ideal for canoes, rowboats and small sailing craft which do not require launching ramps.

At Elk Lake it was suggested that a second ramp might be installed or that additional parking arrangements be made for the existing ramp at the north end. But as Saanich is no longer an owner of the lake, it was thought additional work might be a regional district responsibility.

The Gorge, including Portage Inlet, has become a highly popular waterway with improvements to the banks and sanitary sewers in the area over recent years. The report questioned whether motor boating would be compatible with a trend to small boats and swimming which is developing in the Gorge.

Ultimately, the Gorge is envisaged as a kind of tidal lake, which together with Colquitz River improvements may enable canoeists to paddle from Esquimalt or Victoria to Beaver-Elk lakes and possibly into Blenkinsop Valley.

EMPTY SEATS CUT FLIGHTS

TORONTO (CP) — Faced with thousands of unsold seats, Canadian airlines are reducing scheduled overseas charter flights this summer to meet new Canadian charter rules.

The cuts announced so far are most dramatic at Air Canada, where in recent weeks the number of charter flights to Great Britain and Europe has been cut to 17 from 38.

Wardair Canada Ltd. has been substituting 180-seat aircraft on charter flights previously scheduled for 450-seat planes.

A Canadian Pacific spokesman said Friday that airline has eliminated only two of 160 flights but more may follow.

With so many seats unsold, a key to the cutbacks may be a requirement under the new Advanced Booking charter rules that at least 80 per cent of the seats on a charter flight must be sold before an aircraft is allowed to take off.

An Air Canada spokesman said passengers on charter flights that have been dropped are being advised of alternate flight arrangements.

He said they are being shifted to other flights leaving from the same city with changes of up to a day or two earlier or later.

Welfare System Study Set

Preparations for a three-day conference in Ottawa later this month of all provincial welfare ministers were discussed Friday by Rehabilitation Minister Norman Levi and federal health and welfare minister Marc Lalonde.

After a meeting lasting two and a half hours, Levi said agenda proposals and other matters relating to the conference were the main topic of discussion. The conference will undertake "a broad review of the whole social security system, he said.

Levi told reporters he had suggested the ground rules for the conference eliminate the necessity for reading of lengthy prepared documents, so that more time can be spent in hard discussion.

It was informally agreed that the provinces circulate in advance their respective position and policy papers, he added. The conference will be held April 25 to 27.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 33-year-old man who slapped and kicked his wife, fracturing her cheek and nose, Friday was sent to jail for three months by Victoria provincial court judge William Ostler.

Charles James Willard, of 413 Langford, "treated his wife viciously on this occasion," said Ostler, noting that Willard was normally a hard-working, intelligent man whose marriage had been "wrecked" by liquor.

The term was imposed for assault causing bodily harm March 10.

A man, sent to jail for a total of 18 months Tuesday, was sentenced to two years less one day Friday, on seven counts involving bad cheques.

Lawrence William Roberts, 35, of 18-1621 Island Highway, has been sentenced to 18 months for indecent assault and a concurrent one-year term for being unlawfully in a dwelling.

Friday, Roberts appeared on four counts of false pretences under $200 and three counts of uttering. He was sentenced to two years less one day on each of the seven counts, to run concurrent with Tuesday's sentence.

Cat D5 Tractor: the do-everything machine

That's how Gerry Bailey, owner of B and B Trucking, in Cloverdale, uses his Caterpillar D5 tractor — for everything. In the photo it's building grade for a railway spur line. It also digs basements, spreads gravel, clears roads, works in a gravel pit, and builds dykes.

The D5 can handle all these jobs, and many more, so well because Caterpillar builds it tough. It's the medium-size crawler with big tractor features. Like three-speed power shift transmission that gives you extra cycling speed and less operator fatigue with single lever on-the-go shifting. Console-mounted steering clutch controls increase operating ease. Strengthened undercarriage features 22-pound shoes with extra grouser height for longer wear life. And track rollers and idlers are lifetime lubricated.

The D5 is powered with a 105 horsepower, 6 cylinder Cat diesel engine that has a 25% torque rise to provide excellent lugging ability and reserve torque. It handles full loads without downshifting.

These are only a few of the features of the versatile Caterpillar D5 tractor that make it the best buy in its size class. Ask your Finning sales representative about the D5 today.

Gov't Beats Down Opposition On Corporations Tax Bill

The legislature gave approval in principle Friday to a bill imposing a tax on capital used by corporations operating within B.C., after Premier Barrett agreed with an opposition member's suggestion to exempt family farms.

The concession by Barrett was not enough to convince the combined forces of the Social Credit, Liberal and Progressive Conservative parties to vote for the bill, however.

Government supporters outvoted the opposition and the bill was approved 39-10.

Spokesmen for the opposition maintained that the tax — which will be one-tenth of one per cent on the capital used on projects within the province per year — will not encourage industrial expansion and therefore will not solve the unemployment problem.

Barrett retorted by saying that it is the intention of the government to make the rich corporations contribute their share for the services available to the citizens of the province. The bill is expected to increase revenues by about $7 million per year.

The premier gave a detailed account of how B.C. is actually a banana republic, thanks to the efforts of the giant United Fruit Company and its dealings with his father, Sam Barrett, a fruit and vegetable dealer in Vancouver years ago.

Barrett said his father had attempted to import bananas fron the Fiji Islands to sell in Vancouver, but had been made "an offer he couldn't refuse" by the United Fruit Company, which supplied Sam with the rest of his fruit for his wholesale operations.

That lesson that his father learned, Barrett said, was "don't mess with the multinational corporations." And that kind of system is not what the present NDP governments wants to see happen.

Barrett said the B.C. tax measure is something that was introduced in the province of Ontario by a Conservative government 43 years ago.

He criticized the opposition members for being "Wall Street freedom fighters" and defending the corporations who will be subject to the new tax.

Last year, he said, the corporations of the province paid only $80 million in taxes compared with $266 million by individual citizens. The government is attempting to even the score, he said.

Barrett said another lesson that he learned from his father, and from former premier W. A. C. Bennett, is that the government should always keep some of the provincial revenue in reserve, in case the economy turns bad some day and the money is needed for people's services.

The capital tax is "a little bit of tuck money," he said, and is "valid and justified."

The suggestion that family farms be exempted from the capital tax was made by Frank Richter (SC—Boundary-Similkameen).

Barrett said it was a valid point and will be incorporated in the regulations which will accompany the act. Other exemptions will be given to credit unions, co-operatives and condominiums, he said.

A Liberal member charged that the government brought in the tax as a "sop to NDP members to show that the government could take a round out of big business."

Allan Williams (L—West Vancouver-Howe Sound) said the tax is unnecessary and will have a "regressive impact" on average and low-income consumers, who will absorb the costs of the tax to the corporations.

The Liberal said the tax will not encourage the expansion and growth in the economy which is so badly needed to decrease the unemployment rolls.

He said the tax should be withdrawn by the government and not brought back until the province's industrial base has expanded sufficiently to absorb the unemployed.

Progressive Conservative house leader Scott Wallace (PC-Oak Bay) also urged the government to withdraw the bill and consider bringing it back in a year.

Wallace said Barrett "has let his philosophy get in the way" and the bill is an example of the socialist government's "bugaboo about corporate enterprises."

Newell Morrison (SC—Victoria) said the effect of the bill on the five companies he directs will mean "sizable" payments of tax to the government.

He said the bill is "an indication of the NDP's policy of anti-business. It is a bias of the government."

Not many companies operating in the province will get the advantage of the $25,000 exemption which the legislation provides, Morrison said, and the companies which are to be taxed do not get the benefit of the same exemption.

He said the bill is "unnecessary, undesirable and will not encourage investment or employment." It is merely the first step in a tax which will become "more and more onerous," he said.

Gary Lauk (NDP—Vancouver Centre) said the tax bill is "rather gentle" and companies do not object to it because they know they can write the tax off against their federal income tax. "They're not complaining, only their lackeys," he said.

Lauk said the NDP government is planning "all kinds of support" for fledgling industries in the province. All taxes are passed on by business to consumers and that argument is no justification for not taxing the coprporations.

SALES TAX CHANGES HINTED

Premier Barrett hinted in the legislature Friday the government may consider altering the existing sales tax system of raising provincial revenue.

During debate on the principle of the Corporation Capital Tax Act, Barrett responded to criticism from opposition members that the corporation capital tax is "regressive" and will hurt consumers.

Barrett said the sales tax — which is a five per cent levy on most goods sold in the province — is regressive because it hurts a great number of people.

"Some day, somehow, I don't know when and I don't know how, whether it is us or another administration, we are going to have to take a look at that five per cent sales tax," Barrett said.

He said the government wants to "make the rich people pay more."

As the system works now, a person on low income and a millionaire pay the same five per cent tax on a suit they might buy, he said.

Cost of Victoria Housing Takes Big $6,683 Leap

The average price of a house in the Victoria area cost $29,289, says a survey covering housing costs across the country.

This is a $6,683 increase since the last survey, in 1969.

Inflation psychology, housing shortage, optimism in the economy, growing demand by young people for houses and pure speculative buying all have combined to drive the price higher.

The survey is based on a canvass of Multiple Listing Service figures, which show Toronto, Vancouver, Hamilton, Ottawa and Halifax as the cities with the hotest housing markets.

Eric Charman, president of the Victoria Real Estate Board, said there has been a fully predicted mass influx into the urban areas and supply has not met this demand.

Charman said in their zeal to prevent bad development, municipal officials have added to the cost rise by not encouraging or allowing enough new housing to be built.

Other people in the real estate and appraisal business in Victoria agree that the price of housing has leaped ahead, particularly in the last three months.

The survey says the Toronto market has reached "wild" proportions, but other cities are narrowing the gap in housing sales activity.

The Multiple Listing Service used by most major city real estate industries accounts for roughly 35 or 40 per cent of total sales.

According to MLS figures, the average sale in Canada has increased annually from $21,302 in 1969 to $26,553 last year.

The regional averages in 1972 were: B.C. $25,730, Alberta $25,056, Saskatchewan $16,726, Manitoba $19,488, Ontario, $29,106, Quebec $27,175, the Maritimes $22,566.

Other MLS figures show that houses in Victoria sold for an average of $22,606 in 1969, compared to $29,289 in the first two months of this year.

The figures for Toronto for the same period are $29,931 and $38,351; for Hamilton $23,368 and $31,257, for Halifax $23,265 and $24,912, for Ottawa $27,292 and $30,268, for Vancouver $23,939 and $36,640.

Land costs on the average make up 17 to 20 per cent of the housing cost. This rises to about 30 per cent in the hot markets of Vancouver, Hamilton, Ottawa and Halifax, and 40 per cent in Toronto.

Such is the demand for housing, MLS listings have declined as a percentage of the total, according to the survey. Exclusive listings sell in a matter of days and others sell simply through signs on the lawn or private advertisements in newspapers.

Realtors expect the prices to continue rising, but some warn that buyers may be going beyond the point of safety. "People are going to run out of money or the lending institutions will become reluctant to let this thing go any higher," said one realtor.

Speculators may be short-circuited because developers are tending to hold on to a house until it is finally built, as a protection against higher lumber and labor costs.

In Toronto, prices may have reached a peak says George Cormack, senior vice-president of A. E. LePage, which clears about $350 million worth of real estate annually. "There is growing evidence that . . . demand is dropping because of buyer resistance to houses priced out of the market."

DECISION-MAKING FOR RED FACTORIES

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union has ordered a major reorganization of industrial management to give factories and other enterprises greater decision-making power over production.

A decree by the Communist party and government said new economic associations will be created between government ministries and production plants.

The law, which will take effect within six months, gives significant management control to the powerful economic bodies and increases each factory's ability to control production.

"Most questions of management of production will be solved immediately" by the factories or new associations, the Soviet Communist party newspaper Pravda said today.

The reorganization of industrial management was necessary "to ensure scientific and technical progress, control the quality of production, and ensure effective use of capital investments and implementation of the state plan," Pravda said.

FRENCH BREAD LOSES APPEAL

PARIS (AP) — A baking teacher says French bread has lost its taste and the average Frenchman is eating less and less of it as a result.

M. R. Calvel of the National School of Milling and Cereal told an international baking industry exposition that the average Frenchman has cut his daily consumption to slightly less than half a pound today from three-quarters of a pound in 1939.

"Bread too blown up with air and too white no longer has the taste of bread," he said.

Calvel said the loss of taste is probably due to more intensive machine kneading, which causes excessive oxidation.

Bleach added to the flour in the form of ascorbic acid and bean flour create a bitter taste, and changing the dough's fermentation time also has hurt its quality, he said.

Virginia Woolf the woman

The Intellectual Beauty Who Changed the Novel

By BEATRICE CARROLL

At one time during the First World War, book reviews by Virginia Woolf were appearing in The Times Literary Supplement nearly every week, and, as her nephew-biographer Quentin Bell tells us, these were never easily accomplished; only after many drafts, sometimes a great many drafts, was she satisfied.

This is a humbling and inhibiting thought with which to approach an appreciation of this richly-colored, sweeping and sympathetic work concerned with a writer who was, as T. S. Eliot said, "the centre of the literary life of London" . . . and a brilliant circle it was. There was the Bloomsbury group, that fine network of intimate friendships and dazzling talents, including the biographer Lytton Strachey and the economist Maynard Keynes, the artistic patrons of whom the most famous was the fantastic Byzantine person of Lady Ottoline Morrell, many artists and writers and critics whose reputations have endured, with the name of Virginia Woolf in foremost position.

VIRGINIA WOOLF, Vols. I and II, by Quentin Bell. Clarke, Irwin. $12 each.

As Professor Bell says, she changed the direction of the English novel away from "the formal railway line" sentence of Galsworthy, Bennett and Wells, and made it "radial" rather than "lineal."

Mrs. Woolf is posthumously fortunate in her biographer, the artist-scholar Quentin Bell, son of her beloved sister, Vanessa, and her husband Clive Bell, the critic. Granted his position as a member of the family, with intimate knowledge of people and events that outsiders could not possibly have, and with unlimited access to all private documents including the diaries which Virginia Woolf kept during most of her life, and other unpublished material, he has surpassed even these advantages.

The literary tradition — and good looks — was strong in the family. Sir Leslie Stephen, father of Virginia, was a literary critic, historian and founder of the Dictionary of National Biography, and as Bell says, other members of the family were "all writers, they all had some gift, some pleasure in the use of the English language." The two streams of intellect and beauty came in to full spate in Leslie Stephen's daughter Virginia. Quentin Bell carries on the literary tradition in this brilliant and absorbing book, written with splendid narrative style and a clear regard for truth.

At times this latter area poses some problems, but the author confronts them honestly. His mother, Vanessa, was involved in several feverish love affairs within the emancipated Bloomsbury circle, and his father, Clive Bell, was jealously half in love with Virginia for many years. He deals candidly with the touchy problem of Virginia's much older half-brother, George Duckworth, whose generosity to his young half-sisters became his later erotic fumblings in the night nursery which Virginia believed "spoilt her life before it had fairly begun," and perhaps accounted for her subsequent frigidity even within the framework of a deeply happy marriage.

What makes this biography especially interesting is the insight into Virginia Woolf the woman as well as the writer. We learn that she was always beautiful even in illness, physically energetic — a surprising fact that belies the languid lily-like photographs, reminiscent of "the art of the Sienese masters of the fourteenth century — given to seven-mile walks, bicycle rides and long hours setting type at the Woolf's Hogarth Press, a believer in the Victorian world of Empire, Class and Privilege, with a sympathetic attitude towards her husband's socialist policies, yet bewildered by the machinery of politics, an intellectual and a lover of children; given to laughter and sometimes elaborate jokes, who fought madness many times from an early age and attempted suicide four times. In 1941 she was successful, walking in to the river Ouse with a heavy stone in her coat pocket, so that this time there would be no failure.

A figure apart from the subject who emerges with noble stature is that of Leonard Woolf. Virginia's marriage to the Cambridge intellectual, former Colonial officer and writer, is called by her nephew "the wisest decision of her life." Certainly without his constant watchful care and love for her, and encouragement during the painful recovery periods from her mental breakdowns — breakdowns, incidentally, of which no one in the Stephen family thought to warn him beforehand — it is doubtful whether she would have written as she did or all she did. It is deeply touching to read portions of the letters and diaries dealing with their partnership that had little basis in sex. In her suicide note to her husband, the last heartbreaking words are: "I don't think two people could have been happier than we have been."

We are indebted to Quentin Bell for this outstanding book about a famous literary figure and the legendary era of Bloomsbury, and can hope that Virginia Woolf's name will be known for far more than part of the cheap title of Edward Albee's play.

Pop Goes The Language

By PAT BARCLAY

"The seven-year-old today has had a heavy dose of adult experiences and global imagery via TV. He enters grade school as an adult."

Like most of the pronouncements of Marshall McLuhan, who never seems to use a dart where a scattergun will do, this one contains a kernel of truth buried in it somewhere. The child used to be father to the man. What sort of person the child-man of the television age will be father to will probably determine the future of homo sapiens on this earth.

It's thoughts like these that give professional educators pause today, as they search for new ways to cope with the human side-effects of the technological revolution. How to reach the new child-man? How to arm him for life in a world increasingly filled with surprises and uncertainties?

One way, according to the compilers of Thomas Nelson and Sons new Language Stimulus Program for Grades 3-6, is to foster creative thinking. ("The development of creative thinking must be considered an essential part of the curriculum if we are to prepare children for a world of bewilderingly rapid change.")

Which is all an elaborate way of saying that Language, as she used to be taught, is in for a facelift.

The "stimulus program" consists of four "core" books, each supported by a group of supplementary materials and a teacher's guidebook, and each designed to be no more like the language texts we used to know than a glossy magazine is like a telephone directory.

The exotic delights of the advertising world have been harnessed to the cart of education, and our children are being taken for a very seductive ride.

It's hard to imagine any child being exposed to this new program and surviving with mind unblown. The books are exciting. They're little masterpieces of pop art, with handpicked passages from the classics (Gulliver, Charlotte's Web) inserted here and there among the cartoons, clippings and photo-collages to remind us that even today the study of language still has something to do with the study of literature.

The real emphasis, however, is on the child's own writing. If this set of books can't stimulate him into tapping his own creative springs, there's probably no hope. All I'm wondering is, whatever happened to Grammar? It looks as though today's kids will just have to pick it up by osmosis.

The Language Matters series, for Grades 9-12, does acknowledge the existence of grammar — rather surreptitiously, I thought. There are a couple of pages of comic strips ("We don't need none!" yells Andy Capp to the travelling salesman. "How do you know?" comes the retort, "I could be selling English lessons") and a timid list of "suggestions" near the back of the book. ("Assign each member of the class . . . a specific area of usage (such as the use of 'ain't') to investigate . . . Reports should be presented to the class (and) . . . collected into one handbook and reproduced so that each member of the class has his own language handbook.") Sort of a do-it-yourself grammar text. Next thing you know we'll be back to personalized spelling, like Shakspeer sometimes used.

The Language Matters series looks intriguing nevertheless. There's been a real effort made to select from the work of Canadian writers (Berton, Laurence, even Joni Mitchell) and the exercises sound stimulating, to say the least. ("Anyone in the class who can characterize the particular quality of the sound of his favourite rock group or singer in five words is permitted to bring a record to class and play it to demonstrate the descriptive words that he thinks apply to the group's special sound. Just for the purpose of this game, please choose descriptive words that can be understood by people over thirty.")

There's even a section on the significance of body language illustrated by photographs of Elizabeth Taylor, in decolletage down to here, playing Kate in The Taming of the Shrew. ("Can you find 21 descriptive words for Kate's character as portrayed by Elizabeth Taylor? If not, do the best you can.")

If you'd like an example of how much the world (and the textbook) has changed, take a look at pages 11-115 of Language Lives, the second book in the Language Matters series. Here Leacock's famous essay "My Financial Career" (it begins, "When I go into a bank I get rattled . . .") appears side by side with a full color, two page spread of photos from an ad for one of Canada's irrepressibly friendly modern banks.

Then there are Nelson's paperback Venture Books, 60 original stories with 50 per cent Canadian content, and something called the Language Development Reading Program, for Grades 4-6. The reader I saw contains several poems and at last, Genuine Made-in-Canada Stories — most of which, unfortunately, are by deservedly little-known Genuine Canadian Authors.

My objection to most of these stories is that they have no real plot. Characters are introduced, things happen, sort of, but the satisfying resolution demanded by the good story is missing.

It's probably a sign of the times. Formal structure, the belief that grammar matters, the longing to create order — these are all elements alien to the mixed-media, multicolored chaos which envelops our lives today.

We can all be delighted to learn that imaginative textbooks are being produced in Canada for Canadian children. But it would be reassuring to know that Canadian teachers planned to use them with an eye on their limitations, as well as on their strengths.

'What's Wrong With Absolutely Everything'

By ROLAND MORGAN

Gordon Rattray Taylor played a big part in the environmental panic of the 1960's with his two thundering blasts of pessimism, The Biological Time Bomb (over-population will end us all) and The Doomsday Book (pollution will end us all). Now he offers 247 pages of "paraprimitive solution."

Taylor seems to be striking a new posture of problem solving — good scientific practice after analysing the problems — and if he is still as in tune with the times as he was in the 60's it bodes well for the 70's.

Hopefully we are entering a decade of bringing the wild industrial machine under control and making it a good thing to live with. We'll try to pacify life, get rid of police forces, car accidents, the rat-race mentality, planned obsolesence, artificial food, all forms of oppression which nobody voted in.

"There will be a new current cliche. "Do your thing" of the 60's will mature into "We'll do our thing", presumably for the betterment of everybody.

Taylor puts it this way: "For the first time we are beginning to be in a position to devise, intentionally, the style of life in which we believe we should live, instead of having to accept society as we find it."

It's a rash remark, of course. Nothing tends to be "for the first time." Adolf Hitler could have made Taylor's statement most aptly in the context of National Socialism. But we know what he means.

By paraprimitive he means in tune with human chromosomes. He means psychological ecology: rules of human nature as absolute as the rules of photosynthesis, spawning, nitrogen cycles. Rules which current industrial life makes people disobey, with ugly results.

For several million years men and women lived in the garden. Then they got smart and booted themselves out.

RETHINK: The Paraprimitive Solution, by Gordon Rattary Taylor. Collins. $8.95.

Now, in the words of the Joni Mitchell song, we've got to get back to the garden. That's Taylor's paraprimitive solution — in an ecological nutshell.

Now that the first rush of panic is wearing off we're getting into the philosophy of environmentalism. (One of the first environmental cost analyses was made during the Skagit Dam affair — the "intangible" value of the Skagit Valley as a human recreation resource was weighed against the conventional priority of more electric toasters in suburban Seattle. Our new government got the message and broke off the deal.)

Taylor carries environmentalism to its ultimate limit: the creation of a society which is primarily adapted to the needs of humans, and only secondarily to the so-called necessities of commerce and industry. Anybody closely associated with municipal and city politics these days soon learns how closely considered are the needs of the automobile: whole departments exist to look after traffic. Little corresponding care for the need of humans.

But that's changing. There is a gut reaction at work, and the re-thinking Taylor is talking about is the attempt to channel that energy into constructive reforms of the way we live. "The future cannot be, must not be, simply an extension of the past: a radical rethinking of the whole system is needed."

And here Taylor takes himself very literally. His latest book is a mind-boggling attempt to say what's wrong with absolutely everything. Generalists as outstanding as Taylor are in an appalling predicament. They can never raise a finger to do anything about a particular situation because they can see it is only a tiny fraction of the whole picture. So they fly round the world — mainly North America — attending conferences to give expert lectures on what's wrong with everything. Most people have been to one of those conventions and heard one of those speakers. Canadians usually import Americans, because, well, Americans ought to know. Americans like to import Europeans to tell them what's wrong with everything — Europeans do it so nicely.

My trouble is that I feel it does very little good to know that everything is all wrong and it all ought to be done differently. The classic job of writers, although Mark Twain said it of editorialists, is not just to say what's wrong, but to get people mad enough about it to do something. Somehow it's depressing just to be mad about everything altogether.

I would be happier if Taylor had restricted himself a bit. He could have chosen a couple of priorities — the motor car, for example, is desperately in need of radical new controls and revision. Western forms of government are all reeling under modern pressures and giving way before the mindless energy of huge corporations. Here are a couple of urgent questions. Surely the concerned reader can be left to make all the other analogies without Taylor's massive lexicon of alternatives. It seems a shame that his undoubted insight is dissipated into a blueprint for saving the world.

There is a need to get people mad enough to do something. In spite of the conviction that we can now "devise, intentionally, the style of life which we believe we should live," it is also true that people have never been more alienated. Fed with considerable information, they feel more helpless than ever before. Atomic bombs seem to be beyond the control of human beings. Nobody voted in television. Nobody voted to have the family reduced to a torture chamber in a shoe box. Nobody voted for loneliness. But it's all happened.

Although we talk glibly about the "global village" and "devising new life styles", it's incredibly hard to persuade most job-holders today that they even have a right to some control over their lives, let alone persuade them to exercise the right. The main thrust is for more pay. Always more pay, and while asking for more pay you often sign away the expectation of more rights, more control over the business.

Taylor's kind of sermonizing is all very well as long as we remember he is well and truly up in the clouds. Perhaps he finds it a little difficult to make the switch from pessimism to optimism. Optimism is so much harder work.

The Mortality Dilemma

By SUSAN MUSGRAVE

Rolf Harvey's poems, as their title might indicate, are preoccupied with mortality. They are an attempt to come to grips with the mundane, the nine-to-five.

Nearly every poem asks questions about death and dying: "Will I ever die?"; "does it ever end?" He also writes "Language depends on at least two./ The brain is the most noticeable disintegration."

THE PERFECT SUICIDE, by Rolf Harvey. New Press. $2.50.

Certainly it is not unusual for a poet — or anyone else for that matter — to "see the skull beneath the skin." The Perfect Suicide is trying to reconcile death in terms of the advantages (and there may not be any) of staying alive.

> "Such wisdom
> the suicide knows:
> I carry myself
> as a lesson
> I will never learn."

Finally Harvey sees that the problem is not really in his own hands and when he realizes this his poems lose some of their "agonized" intensity.

There are many good lines and images in these poems although only in one or two can he sustain his energy all the way through. He rushes to finish poems that need to be extended and explored more fully.

And there are unsuccessful lines like "The churches bash their bells" and "Then land. With its homes and whoring/ Its midnight hells and warped wharves." It is like hearing a note off key and since, for the most part, the poems do not falter it makes these harsh sounding lines stand out all the more.

When he is in control of his rhythms he is most impressive:

> "A sleek woman > ribs showing > so thin she's fragile > like those ships
> old fishermen make from match sticks > and they stick into bottles > giving them the strength > of being untouchable."

The last poem in the book, May Day 1971, (it covers five pages and is consistently powerful) is somehow different from the rest. It is hypnotic and incantatory and it's easy to get caught up in the sounds and the way they're flowing. Each word is in place: it is a tapestry woven together with words.

> "Night trickles down on all things > children sleep against."

and

> "Night is the secret vengeance of the > blind man."

It is a poem that ties the whole book together as well — answers all questions asked but poses others which are unanswerable. Indeed, it carries the weight of the book:

> "Night trickles down and we learn to > sleep.
> The black is a narcotic > that teaches us by use.
> We learn to die in preparation for our > deaths."

WHAT THE MILITARY DOES

By R. H. ROY

Periodically, but infrequently, a book is published concerned with Canadian defence which a reviewer can say without any qualms that "This is a must." Such is the case with Canadian Defence Priorities by a young English professor currently teaching at the University of British Columbia. A graduate of Oxford, he came to Canada in 1970 and for two years was the executive secretary, Strategic and International Studies Commission, Canadian Institute of International Affairs. It was while he held the latter post that he gathered the material and wrote most of this book.

What Dr. Gray attempts to do is examine the structure and functions of Canada's armed forces today, study their recent origins, assess their value, and predict — judge might be a better term — their relevance in the decade to come. His assessment and his conclusions will not please everyone, but at least here is an honest attempt without political bias to observe what the military does; why it does it, and whether it should continue doing it.

Canada's post-war commitments to Europe (NATO) and to the United States (NORAD) as well as her peace-keeping duties for the United Nations draw special attention. Gray feels that, like it or not, we share a continent with the U.S. and "even were Canada to realign herself in world politics, the insecurity of the United States would inevitably mean the insecurity of Canada."

But does this mean that we should not only renew the NORAD agreement but strengthen our position in it?

CANADIAN DEFENCE PRIORITIES: A question of Relevance, by C. S. Gray. Clarke, Irwin. $9.50.

Not necessarily. This military agreement with the U.S. is concerned with the air defence of the continent against Russian bombers, and in an all-out nuclear war it would be difficult to see the bombers for the missiles.

Logically, says Gray, we should not plan for bomber defence unless we plan for missile defence as well. Yet our prime minister has said we shall have nothing to do with anti-ballistic missiles.

Would it be illogical to renew the NORAD agreement, then, when it comes up in two months time? Not necessarily. Gray advocates the retention by Canada of a small air interception capability, even though he concedes it makes no contribution to strategic stability. Co-operation with the U.S. does bring other benefits however, both diplomatic and military. Also, the NORAD system permits us to know who is using our air space, and that's always a comfort.

Professor Gray makes a number of statements which those in the armed forces should find interesting:

- "The Armed Forces must accept the fact that for the foreseeable future they have no important military tasks to fulfill."
- "The Armed Forces must understand that the support of civilian authorities in largely non-military ways is going to be their most important function throughout the 1970's."

It should not be presumed from these observations that the author is merely firing broadsides at Canada's present military policies. Rather he examines them from every angle, gives alternatives, suggests different roles, and weighs the pros and cons of the alliances, military commitments, etc., in which we find ourselves.

New Swedish-Designed System May Replace Toilet

By DON HALL
For the Environmental Centre of Greater Victoria

This invention long has been the principal symbol of civilization, yet its inventors are all but forgotten.

There are scores of names for it if you count the vulger and euphemistic ones. Toilet, water closet, convenience, lavatory, can and john are only a few.

The design goes back at least to a book by Sir John Harrington in 1596, but the first patent was issued to another Englishman, Joseph Braham, in 1778. Braham's design wasn't entirely suitable for use inside dwellings, however, and improvements were made. Some credit a man of the Victorian era, Thomas Crapper, with the invention that brought indoor plumbing — that symbol of sanitary living — to the world.

Now that the flush toilet has been widely accepted for nearly a century, the familiar fixture is becoming a different sort of a symbol.

It no doubt will take its place with DDT, the internal combustion engine and no-deposit, no-return bottles as a prime example of man's arrogant disregard for the fact that he simply is one of many interrelated organisms living on the same small planet.

Braham's flush of success has all the technologically advanced peoples of the world awash in their own filth. His was an example of delayed reaction British imperialism that has had a devastating impact on the earth.

The idea behind the toilet and the massive networks of sanitary sewer systems usually connected with it, is simply to carry our bodily wastes away. However, "away" is a very imprecise location. Enlightened engineers say it doesn't exist.

Further, mixing one part of human waste with a hundred parts of clean water does nothing to dilute the problem. It merely pollutes the water. The major rivers of the world have become open sewers despite efforts of technicians to take the wastes out of the water that is flushed into the sewers.

Soil micro-organisms have a way of detoxifying harmful elements of the wastes, but because of well-founded fears of disease, few Western peoples utilize human waste as fertilizer. Asians, of course, have kept their fields fertile for hundreds of generations by applying their own wastes to the soil.

If some bright engineer could devise a simple method of handling human waste that would totally eliminate water pollution and produce a safe soil builder, too, you'd think it would soon sweep the world as a replacement for the flush toilet, wouldn't you?

Well, Swedish engineer Rikart Lindstrom invented such a system back in 1939, but it has only recently begun to receive attention outside Scandinavia.

He calls his system the Clivus — the Latin word for slope as in "declivity" or downslope — because of the slope which is the secret to the process.

In simple terms, the Clivus is nothing more than a converted compost box which is located below kitchen and bathroom. But Lindstrom's exacting design makes it an odor-free, completely sanitary system that requires no connection with sewers or water lines and consumes no electricity or fuels. Further, it produces a steady amount of rich, totally safe compost.

In short, the Clivus is the answer to an environmentalist's dream. It is the first ecological home sewage and garbage disposal system.

Although it would be ideal for dwellings in areas such as the Gulf Islands or the rocky heights in many parts of the Greater Victoria area, the Clivus still is not available in North America. Lindstrom has found that it is too expensive to export, and because North Americans are so totally conditioned to having water in their toilets and fushing their wastes away, would-be manufacturers on this side of the Atlantic apparently are reluctant to invest despite the fact that the Clivus is fully approved by health authorities in Sweden, Norway, Finland and Switzerland.

Robert Rodale, writer, editor, magazine and book publisher, and second-generation organic living guru, is convinced there is a good market for the Clivus in North America. He bases his opinions on response to his articles on the Clivus published in Rodale journals Compost Science and Organic Gardening. Rodale believes there is widespread demand for a safe and environmentally sound toilet.

"Not only is soil a good disposal receptacle for human wastes, but farm lands need human fertilizer value to create a permanent agriculture," Rodale wrote. He cited figures stating that a million humans each year produce 5,800,000 pounds of nitrogen, 1,825,000 pounds of potassium and 776,000 pounds of phosphorus. "We flush that wealth down the drain at our peril," he added.

More recently, it has been reported that a flushable, possibly multi-unit, Clivus system is being developed with the North American market in mind.

When installed in a house, the Clivus decomposition container — about the size of an ordinary forced air furnace — is fitted in the basement. Its sloping floor is lined with a layer of peat moss, a layer of garden soil and a layer of leaves, grass clippings or other similar vegetable matter. Its top is connected with the toilet stool, kitchen garbage chute and an exhaust duct which must go through the roof of the house.

Then it is ready for use.

Bacteria from the organic lining materials helps break down wastes that drop from above and the break-down process creates heat. Warm air from the chamber constantly flows up the exhaust duct in a strong draft. This pulls in fresh air through special vents to speed decomposition. It also assures that no odors escape when the toilet stool lid or garbage chute lid are open.

Peat in the bottom of the container soaks up urine and the ammonia it produces helps support a large population of de-nitrifying bacteria that add to the breakdown of organic matter. Liquids are converted to water vapor in the process and are vented off.

As more and more excrement and refuse are added to the chamber, lower layers are pushed down the all-important declivity and under a baffle into the storage chamber. After a year or two, this chamber yields occasicnal bucketsful of extremely rich compost.

The Clivus has few disadvantages. It's been reported that well-meaning tenants have poured disinfectants down the openings thereby killing bacterial action. If the whole pile dies, the mess has to be cleaned out and a fresh lining — complete with new bacteria — put down. It's almost an insignificant problem when compared with the advantages.

It's no wonder that environmentalists in Europe and North America are predicting the Clivus eventually will replace Braham's old flushable "convenience" which has served us so long — and left our environment in such a mess.

Florida Proves a Haven For Many Exotic Animals

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Florida has given up the fight to eradicate a host of exotic animals which have found happiness there and is concentrating on controlling the horde of feathered, furred and scaled immigrants.

The list of exotic creatures which have popped up in the wild contains some surprises.

Many Floridans know they share their state with giant toads, African snails and armadillos.

But few realize that North American elk are roaming wild.

Or that a few hunters have shot what they thought were Florida panthers only to discover they had bagged South American jaguars.

Florida has proved such a haven for exotic animals that biologists and state officials now agree the state would be wasting its money if it continued attempts to eradicate those that have become established.

Most biologists believe the best thing to do is destroy those that have not yet gained a foothold and tighten controls to make sure that other would-be immigrants stay out.

The most publicized of Florida's exotic animals has been the walking catfish, a native of Southeast Asia that found its way into Florida's lakes and streams a few years ago.

The fish had proved more than a match for native bass and other gamefish and has totally eliminated native fish species in some lakes and streams.

"The widespread introduction of the jet passenger airplane about 10 years ago make transportation of animals swift and sure, and it allowed importers to greatly increase the number and variety of animals they brought in," says Dr. Richard Robins, an icthyologist at the University of Miami.

"Florida is what biologists call an unsaturated environment. It has relatively few native species of animals, and this allows imported animals to gain a foothold quickly and spread at a tremendous rate. There is no question that we've lost the battle against the walking catfish. The best we can hope to do is control its numbers."

Dr. James Layne of the Archbold Biological Laboratory in Lake Placid, Fla., says a small South American wildcat called the jaquarundi seems to have established a permanent breeding population in central Florida, and a South American rodent called the nutria has formed colonies along the northwest Gulf of Mexico coast.

Egyptian Relics Looted

CAIRO (AP) — A wave of archeological looting is spreading across the land of the Pharaohs.

Officials believe an international network of antique dealers from the United States and Europe is behind the operation.

In the first three months of this year, archeologists say, thousands of ancient tombs have been illegally plundered, with the loss of artworks and papyrus scrolls worth millions of dollars.

A few weeks ago, police investigating a double murder in upper Egypt discovered a group of looters who had been plundering sites for eight months.

"It was shocking to find 400 acres of archeological sites all ravaged," says Fathy Wasif, chief inspector of the antiquities department.

In 5,000 tombs nothing remains but broken sculptures and mummies, he reports.

Last month, well organized groups plundered more than 200 Pharaonic tombs near Fayoum, 60 miles from Cairo, and hit two other sites.

Egypt recently established an institute to train guards and has dispatched 300 additional guards to archeological sites.

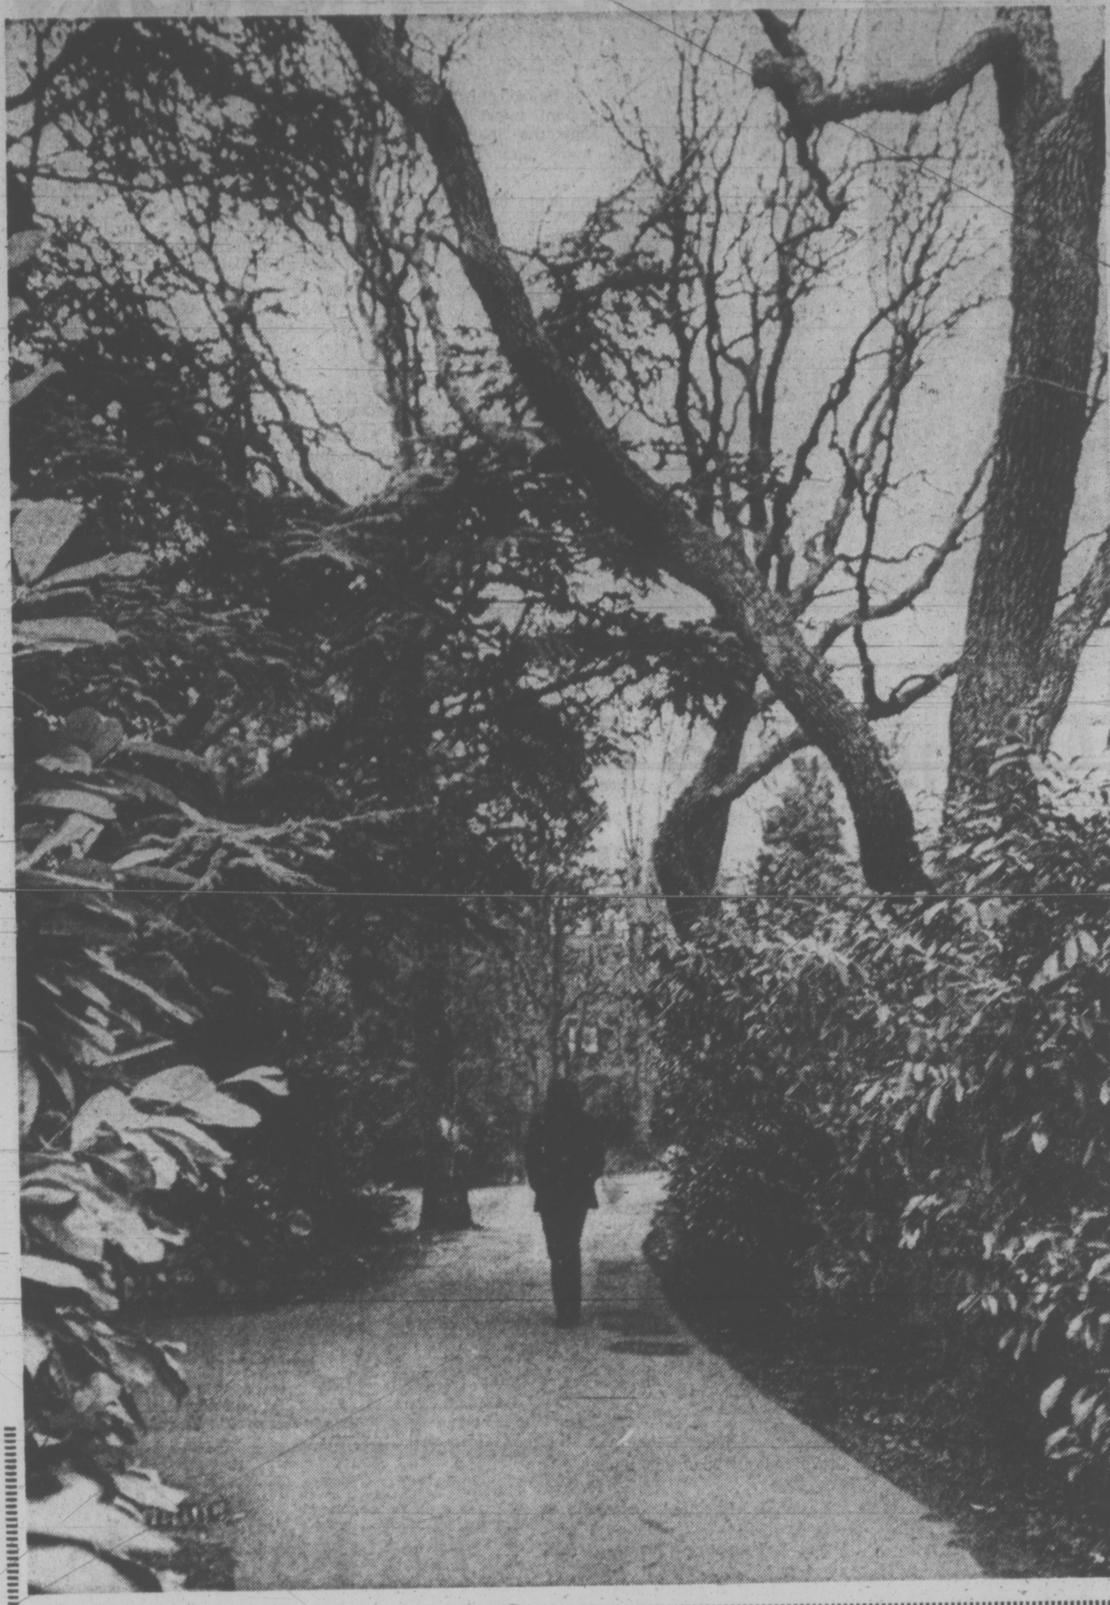
SECOND SECTION



IT DOESN'T LOOK LIKE IT, but this is a public highway. It's Terrace Avenue in the city's special Rockland zone, a carefully preserved lane which at some points looks like little more than a footpath. City zoning regulations give this backwater special protection from building development. (John McKay photos.)

James Bay Also Wants Rockland-Like Zoning

By ROLAND MORGAN
Times Staff

A decision is expected shortly from Victoria's advisory planning commision on the future of the James Bay area.

The 15-member commission is studying, behind closed doors, a new James Bay plan which would modify a boom-or-bust 1968 plan which gave carte-blanche to apartment developers.

However, the suggested new plan still sets James Bay's population target at about 17,000, puts hundreds of older houses under the developer's axe and generally dooms the James Bay neighborhood, as it is now known.

And concerned James Bay residents are asking: "Why us?"

Recently the community association executive formally called on city council to explain why high population densities and destruction of old neighborhoods was all right for James Bay, but not all right for Rockland area (the vicinity north of Government House).

Rockland is the only city area, apart from the Inner Harbor, to have its very own zoning.

It's called R-1 (a), or Rockland zoning, and it was specially created to preserve the Rockland neighborhood in just the manner the James Bay Community Association would like to see James Bay protected.

There's a hefty minimum floor area for new buildings, should they occur. No "townhouses" for Rockland.

There are spacious setback regulations so that everything has a big garden in keeping with the current atmosphere of the district. No "up-against-the-wall" building for Rockland.

Asked to sum up what the modifications of normal residential zoning meant in Rockland, a planning officer said: "It's set up in a way that generally encourages the preservation of existing houses."

So the tree-lined boulevards of Rockland are, by official edict, protected sanctuaries of gracious living. Secluded Terrace Avenue, barely 10 feet wide, sometimes little more than a footpath, will not in the near future be widened for commuter traffic or turned into a service road for a sprawling apartment building.

Why then, wonder James Bay property owners and concerned tenants alike, must their area be thrown into apartment development? They feel the area now offers the kind of older, cheaper housing which city officials readily admit the city badly lacks.

The community asociation's suggestion is that James Bay, too, should have its own zoning category. Perhaps a special community plan zone, they say, which would set a design for a varied community combining many different forms of housing, different forms of shopping and well-thought-out community services.

Also on the scene is a new James Bay ratepayers' group led by Ald. Percy Frampton and highrise developer Jim Mace. This group basically favors the current apartment zoning for James Bay.

Meanwhile the advisory planning commission is expected to hand in its recommendation within a week or two and council then must decide what action to take.

Council may decide to take no immediate action and heed a third request from the James Bay community association — to leave a building freeze on the area while they determine what the residents want for their neighborhood.

Parents To Blame —Whitbread

Parents are to blame if their children contract diphtheria, Greater Victoria's senior public health officer said today.

An immunization program currently protects 80 to 90 per cent of children but getting immunization requires the consent of parents, said Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread.

There have been four cases and 29 carriers identified in B.C. to date this year and Whitbread agreed with a statement by Health Minister Dennis Cocke Friday that diphtheria "is a potentially explosive hazard."

An immunization level of 70 per cent will prevent an epidemic, he added.

Infants receive their first immunization in their first year if parents take them to one of the health board's well-baby clinics. There are three boosters given through the elementary school years if parents give consent.

'Frustrations In Vietnam'

A change in topic is announced for the noon meeting of the Men's Canadian Club, April 10, in the Old Forge dining room.

Gen. A. E. Wrinch, formerly of Hazleton, B.C., and serving for many years as national commissioner of the Canadian Red Cross, will address members on the subject of Frustrations in Vietnam.

Rebel Nuns Won't Be at Meeting

A letter Friday to Bishop Remi de Roo and Sister Leonette Hoesing from five Sisters in the Society of the Love of Jesus states emphatically they will not attend a society meeting next Thursday.

Three of the Sisters have been sitting in at St. Mary's Priory for 24 days in a dispute among members over control of the society.

The letter is highly critical of both the bishop and Sister Leonette on a number of issues and demands that security guards which have kept the Sisters from most of the Priory building be removed. A guard was still on duty this morning.

Neither Bishop de Roo nor Sister Leonette could be reached for comment.

Of next week's meeting, the letter says in part:

"Just don't hold your breath waiting for any of us to show up because we know full well what you have in mind, which is to bring those ringers and proxies in from Yankton (a religious order in S. Dakota) and other places, out vote us, get around the quorum rule by saying you've got 100 per cent of the Sisters habitually in residence in the Priory, and then railroad through the agenda.

"We just don't think it's going to work."

Sister Mary Agnes Eaton said today the letter was signed by herself and Sisters Mary Josephine Donovan and Mary Lucy Ford, the three Sisters sitting in, as well as Mother Cecilia Mary and Sister Mary Julia Kelly, the latter two working at the Good Shepherd animal shelter at Mill Bay. Mother Cecilia is founder of the order and was mother prioress for many years.

The dissidents claim that Sister Leonette was improperly elected mother prioress and have refused to recognize her authority. Leonette and some other members of the society have established a new priory residence across Goldstream Avenue from the building occupied by the three Sisters.

The letter is signed first by Sister Eaton and says at one point:

"I don't intend to go into a recital of all of the petty persecutions which we have suffered at the hands of Sister Leonette . . .," but there has been discrimination in the matter of food supplies.

AMBULANCE TALKS MONDAY

Employees of Garden City Ambulance will meet Ald. Percy Frampton Monday, a development which ends for now the threat of a walkout by the men providing emergency ambulance service in the city.

Frampton is chairman of city council's health committee and the employees are worried about their jobs when Garden City's contract with Victoria ends June 30.

The city has indicated that emergency ambulance service will be reorganized and operated out of Victoria General Hospital on an interim basis, with the prospect of a regional ambulance service ultimately being organized by the provincial government.

"I didn't see any point in the meeting," Frampton said today, "but I told them if they wanted to talk, I'd happy to listen to them."

He had earlier indicated that Victoria will insist of fulfilment of its contract with Garden City and what the ambulance service's employees do is beside the point.

Ed Pheifle, one of the nine employees involved, said a delegation of three or four would meet Frampton Monday morning.

"As long as we've got our meeting, we're satisfied," he said.

The men are worried about what qualifications will be required of the staff of six expected to be hired to operate the single ambulance the city intends buying.

Kootenay Next Out

The escort vessel Kootenay, currently at CFB Esquimalt, has been designated as the vessel to relieve the destroyer-escort Terra Nova, defence minister James Richardson said Friday in Ottawa.

The Esquimalt-based Terra Nova is in Bangkok, Thailand, as part pf the contingency plan to remove Canadian observers from Vietnam, if necessary.

The vessel has clearance to visit Hong Kong, Subic Bay near Manila in the Philippines, and Singapore. All other visits must be cleared by Maritime Command Pacific in Esquimalt and national defence headquarters in Ottawa.

Richardson could not say when or if the Terra Nova will be relieved, as much depends on how long Canadians will remain in Vietnam.

The ship is only one part of the Canadian evacuation contingency plan. An armed forces plane is almost always on hand in southeast Asia.

Lost in the Woods, One Little Creek

EVEN AFTER A lengthy association with running water, I'm not sure at what point a stream ceases to be rated as a creek and merits the status of riverhood. My dictionary offers only limited help. It lists a creek as "a small stream, often a shallow or intermittent tributary to a river", and in a sly attempt at buck-passing, further defines it as a brook. Then it hastens on to deal with creel, "a wicker basket, especially one used by anglers for carrying fish".

It could have added that only a madman or a masochist would bushwhack his way along a typical brushy creek with any receptacle as awkward as a creel snagging itself in every thicket.

But precise definition apart, the creeks I like best are those whose tiny flowages slip along furtively through heavy cover. Except at the height of a freshet, they don't draw attention to themselves. Their pools are confined and secretive. The fisherman with enough spring in his legs for a standing jump can span their riffles without wetting his boots.

In April they fill their brown beds comfortably. By August of a hot summer they have diminished to thin trickles, or to chains of shrunken pools fed by underground seepage.

The highways department rarely dignifies them with bridges. It stuffs them under the blacktop through steel culverts, and they find their way to salt water as best they can.

Few grownup anglers waste time on the little creeks, which are devilish difficult to cope with. The fly fisherman is almost ridiculously out of place on them and the spin caster only less so. They demand stealth, ingenuity, infinite patience, an approach unencumbered by purist conviction and a willingness to accept small rewards for large effort.

These requirments call for a boy of 12 years old or thereabouts, with a can of worms or a jar of salmon eggs, and a no-nonsense attitude toward any trout that grabs hold. He knows that where dainty tactics fail, the quick heave-ho may succeed.

In our home district there are several minor creeks that might well have been made to order for boys with fishing in mind. Last fall, while prospecting a saltwater beach for the sea-run cutthroat that had vanished after the first rain-laden southeaster, I watched a few determined coho threshing their way into one of these rivulets.

It seemed logical to assume that the lost cutthroat had also buttoned themselves into the little creeks to feast on dropped salmon eggs and other available tidbits while ripening for their own late-winter spawning.

But I didn't put my hypothesis to the test, and forgot about it until the afternoon a couple of weeks ago when we gave two local boys a lift home from school.

After classes the day before, they had taken some worms from Jimmy's garden on an excursion up a creek, and come back with trout for their dinner.

My ears perked at this report. What size were their fish?

"One was about a foot long," Jimmy said.

His companion in the venture added casually, "I hooked a bigger one but it got off."

At this point it occured to me that Win and I had been shamefully neglecting our own fishing, and should take steps next weekend to correct that situation.

Our place isn't rich in garden worms, and conscience suggested that we should leave the few we are blessed with to improve the soil.

Still, if the creek cutthroat were partial to worms, it would be folly to deny them.

By hard digging, we rounded up a few crawlers. We were readying our tackle when my wife paused, consulted the calendar, then asked a question.

"Do you know what day this is?"

"Sure," I told her, "It's April Fool's Day, and don't try anything."

"I don't need to," Win said. "Our fishing licences expired yesterday, and we forgot to pick up new ones."

We returned our worms to the garden patch and put our gear away.

Boys, after all, don't need fishing licences.

Determined Claremont Ball-Carrier Is Stopped by Sweater-Clutching Victoria High Tackler

Spartans Seek Greater Glory

The Howard Russel Cup is being returned to the display shelf in Claremont, but it'll be at least another week before the Spartans will be allowed to stow away their rugby gear.

There's one more assignment, the B.C. championship tournament.

And a victory in the 12-team provincial tournament, scheduled for Victoria next weekend, "would be a great way to end a great season," says Claremont coach Ed Kubek.

The league - topping Spartans added to their laurels Friday at Royal Athletic Park by defeating Victoria High Titans 16-3 and provided Claremont with its fifth straight Victoria-area high school rugby title.

The result stamped Spartans as Vancouver Island's top-ranked team in next weekend's tournament. The Titans draw second seeding.

Claremont drew full marks for its title victory Friday in a game that packed all the scoring late in the second half.

Titans, who finished second to the Spartans in league play, battled Claremont to a scoreless standoff for the first three-quarters of the match with a spunky and alert defensive display.

More aggressive and superior in the line-outs and scrums, it was Claremont that controlled play, however.

Victoria's gritty defence finally buckled and a pair of rapid-fire tries midway through the second half broke it open.

Winger Dan Rafter, springing loose from a crowd of Titan tacklers, scored Claremont's first try. Dave Chambers booted the convert to make it 6-0.

The Spartans came right back moments later when winger Tom Card was put into the clear on a superb passing series.

Victoria scored its only points at the 23-minute mark when Tony Flynn booted a 20-yard penalty goal.

The goal revived Titans, who twice forced scrums on Claremont's five-yard line within the next few minutes. Spartans cleared sharply on both occasions, and smothered Titans' last hopes.

Prop-forward Chris Neal counted Claremont's final try with only seconds remaining. Chambers again added the convert.

Hull Scores Twice But Passes Credit

WINNIPEG (CP) — Bobby Hull scored two goals, including the winner, in Friday's 3-1 World Hockey Association victory over Minnesota Fighting Saints, but the Winnipeg Jets playing-coach gave the credit to his linemates.

The win gave Winnipeg a 1-0 lead in the best-of-seven quarter-final series.

"Norm (Beaudin) was perpetual motion out there all night and Chris (Bordeleau) looked like a drowned rat after the game," Hull said of his linemates who set up his goals in the first and third period.

"The guys all worked their tails off, everybody did their job. There were no glaring mistakes."

Hull scored only one goal in five regular-season games against Minnesota. Bordeleau added the insurance marker in the third period. Mike Antonovich got the Minnesota goal, giving them a brief 1-1 tie.

Both Hull and Minnesota coach Harry Neale said afterwards they expect a long, hard fought series.

Neale gave Winnipeg goalie Ernie Wakely full credit for the saves he made, particularly off breaks by Wayne Connelly and Billy Klatt about one minute apart in the second period.

"I thought we could pull it out when we tied it in the third period. I knew the next goal would win."

The Minnesota coach said his club made an error in letting Hull get loose for his first goal, but on the winner "it looked like we had him tied up; but against guys like Hull and Bordeleau you just have to do a better than usual job."

Wakely and McCartan each faced 29 shots before 7,354 fans.

Second game in the West Division series between the regular-season champion Jets and the fourth-place Saints will be played Sunday in Winnipeg.

Three games are scheduled for tonight including the other West Division match-up with Houston Aeros, 7-2 victors Thursday, entertaining Los Angeles Sharks. In the East Division, Ottawa Nationals meet New England Whalers in Boston in the first game of their series and Cleveland Crusaders, leading 1-0 in their series, play host to Philadelphia Blazers.

HIGHROCK DEFEATS LANSDOWNE

Highrock captured the district junior high school rugby championship Friday by defeating Lansdowne 10-0 at Centennial Stadium.

Ahead 6-0 at the half on Steve Rouault's try and a conversion by Jim Bergin, the Stew Barber-coached Highrock team withstood a strong, second-half assault by Lansdowne before wrapping up the victory on Mike Reid's late try.

Plante Goes to Bench

Times News Services

Jacques Plante has followed Boston Bruin teammate Phil Esposito to the sidelines, and Buffalo manager Punch Imlach doesn't think his Sabres will make it there "as fast as some people think."

Those were some of Friday's developments as eight National Hockey League teams prepared their third games in the best-of-seven quarterfinals.

In Boston, the Bruins confirmed something that had been suspected . . . that Esposito will definitely be out of action for the rest of the quarter-final series with New York Rangers, and possible for the balance of the season.

The league scoring champion suffered an injured right knee. A Bruin spokesman said Esposito continues "to undergo extensive examination" to see if surgery will be necessary.

Esposito's loss is just another big blow added to the pair administered by Rangers when they won the first two series games on Boston ice while Plante was turning in shaky performances.

Plante, the veteran goaltender who was expected to give the Bruins some playoff spark, has been benched by Boston coach Bep Guidolin. Ed Johnston is expected to start for Bruins tonight and Ross Brooks may get the call for Sunday's fourth game.

Imlach, meanwhile, said not to discount the Sabres because they trail Montreal Canadiens 2-0. "If we play the kind of hockey we're capable of playing, the series is far from over," he said.

Tonight's Buffalo-Montreal game will be televised nationally, starting at 5 p.m. PST. Game No. 4 also will be televised by CBC on Sunday, starting at 4 p.m. PST.

Like the Bruins and Sabres, St. Louis Blues also face a "must win" situation tonight. The Blues trail Chicago Black Hawks 2-0 after suffering 7-1 and 1-0 setbacks.

Despite the advantage, Chicago coach Bill Reay says his Hawks "must play better" if they want to be sure of reaching the semi-final round. He wasn't happy with Chicago's overall performance in Thursday's 1-0 victory.

Philadelphia Flyers and Minnesota North Stars are tied 1-1 as their series shifts to Bloomington, Minn., the Stars' home ice.

Underdogs Snarl In Hoop Playoffs

By The Canadian Press

The underdogs jumped up and growled Friday night, with all three winners notching first victories in their National Basketball Association playoff series.

At Chicago the Bulls led most of the way to defeat champion Los Angeles Lakers 96-86 to cut the Lakers' lead to 2-1 in their best-of-seven Western Conference semi-final. Alanta Hawks, down two games to Boston, stormed on the Celtics' home court to take a 118-105 victory and narrow that Eastern series to 2-1. And at Baltimore the Bullets beat New York 97-89 to stave off elimination, making Eastern series 3-1 for the Knicks.

The Bulls led most of the way at Chicago behind the 54-point shooting of Chet Walker and Bob Love. At one point they were up 15.

Walker, who had averaged only 11.5 points in the two games at Los Angeles, poured in 30 points and Love contributed 24.

The Bulls were able to check the Lakers' hot backcourt pair, Jerry West and Gail Goodrich, especially in the second half.

In the American Basketball Association, Carolina Cougars eliminated New York Nets 136-113 to take their best-of-seven quarter-final in five games while Kentucky Colonels took a 3-1 stranglehold on their quarter final by tripping Virginia Squires 108-90.

BOWLER OF WEEK

Sizzling effort in middle game helped Joe Froehlich set pace in men's tenpin division during 24th week of Times Bowler-of-the-Week contest. On way to award-winning tally, Joe blasted pins for 264 in second game and added scores of 187 and 178 for three-game series of 629 in Wednesday Mixed League at Mayfair Lanes.

Twins Also Enjoyed Designated Fielders

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tony Oliva made home run history as a designated hitter Friday night but Minnesota Twins were just as happy over a couple of designated outfielders.

Oliva, who played in only 10 games last season after a pair of knee operations, smashed a two-run homer off Oakland's Catfish Hunter in the first inning, his first since 1971, and outfielders Larry Hisle and Jim Holt added solo blasts as the Twins spoiled the A's opening game as baseball's world champions 8-3.

The three other games on opening day of the American League season also featured long balls, although none of the seven other history-making designated hitters achieved anything more than a single.

Carlton Fisk belted two homers, one a grand slam, and drove in six runs as Boston Red Sox shelled New York Yankees 15-5; Baltimore's Brooks Robinson drove in four runs with a pair of homers and Don Baylor delivered a homer, triple and two doubles in the Orioles' 10-0 rout of Milwaukee Brewers, and Frank Robinson homered the first pitch on his return to the AL to start California Angels and Nolan Ryan to a 3-2 triumph over Kansas City Royals.

Chicago White Sox and Texas Rangers were rained out while Detroit Tigers and Cleveland Indians get under way today.

National League scores: Chicago Cubs 3 Montreal Expos 2, Pittsburgh Pirates 7 St. Louis Cardinals 5, New York Mets 3 Philadelphia Phillies 0, Houston Astros 2 Atlanta Braves 1 in 13 innings and San Diego Padres 4, Los Angeles Dodgers 2. Cincinnati and San Francisco were not scheduled.

Oliva batted in cleanup spot as the Twins' designated hitter.

"This way, at least I get a chance to be in the ball game," said the sore-kneed slugger.

Orlando Cepeda, Boston's designated hitter, suffered through an 0-for-6 game but the other Red Sox exploded with 20 hits to bury the Yankees.

New York's Ron Blomberg actually was the first designated hitter in major league history. For trivia buffs it was 1:53 p.m. EST when he walked with the bases loaded in the first inning to drive across the first run by a designated hitter.

Old Formula Works Again

SASKATOON — Saskatoon Blades, leaning on the same formula they used to skate away with the Eastern Division championship, got the jump Friday in the opening game of the Western Canada Junior Hockey League semi-finals.

Balanced scoring and strong defence—Blades' season-long style—showed again as the Jack McLeod-coached Saskatoon team defeated Flin Flon Bombers 6-1 in the first game of their best-of-seven series.

Second game will be played here Sunday.

Centre Bob Bourne scored two goals for the Blades while Bill Laing, Russ Walker, Dave Lewis and Pat Rooney shared the others.

Blaine Stoughton, on a power play, was the only Bomber to beat Blade netminder Ed Humphreys. Humphreys drew excellent support and made only 21 stops while rival Harvey Stewart was outstanding with a 29-shot display, many from point-blank range.

Cunningham Takes Scoring Honors

Jim Cunningham of the YMCA was an easy winner of the Victoria Senior "B" Men's Basketball League scoring championship.

Cunningham finished the season with 306 points to top Jim McKay of the league-winning London Boxing Club by 42 points. Garry Woodburn of YMCA finished third with 258 points.

Top scoring average belonged to Tom Hatcher of Restoration Services, who scored 112 points in five games for a lusty 22.4 mark. Teammate Mike Taaffe, who finished sixth in the scoring race, was close behind with a 22.3 average.

At Speeds Over 200 You're Just Pointing

HOUSTON (AP) — A. J. Foyt, three-time Indianapolis 500 champion, says that speeds of championship-type race cars have out-distanced safety standards, making today's Texas Twin 200 race one of the most dangerous of his career.

"When you're running at speeds over 200 miles per hour, you're just pointing," Foyt told the Huston Sports Writers and Sportscasters Association.

"You're no more than a guinea pig.

"I'm sure you're going to see a lot of people hurt. These cars aren't designed to run that fast."

United States Auto Club (USAC) officials are predicting the championship car portion of the race will be the fastest auto race ever run. Mario Andretti and Gordon Johncock have been timed at more than 200 m.p.h in test runs.

"It's time the USAC did something," Foyt said. "It's a shame that it always seems that somebody has to get killed before anybody will do anything.

"When you see some of your friends getting messed up because some people won't act, that takes some of the fun out of racing."

Foyt referred to Merle Bettenhausen, who was sitting at the same table with Foyt. Bettenhausen suffered severe injuries and lost his right arm in a crash last year.

"The old Yankee ingenuity of speed has gone past the safety factor," Bettenhausen said.

"We used to run at 150 miles per hour and now it's 200 but the cars aren't any safer. If we don't slow them down, we have to make them safer."

BECAUSE YOU SCOOP THE BALL UP OFF THE TURF, TOM. THIS IS THE RESULT OF HAVING YOUR WEIGHT ON YOUR RIGHT FOOT

RACING DRIVERS START SUNDAY ON NEW SEASON

By STEWART LANG

Times Staff

Skinned knuckles could be plentiful today as the spanner brigade works overtime in about 50 garages on Vancouver Island. Turning the workshops into hives of activity are drivers and mechanics putting, hopefully, finishing touches to preparations for Sunday's opening of the 20th automobile-racing season at Western Speedway.

Both stock cars and super-stocks will be competing in the first 1973 program at the Millstream Road oval. Time trials begin at 1 p.m. and racing gets underway at 2.

There are 30 stocks and 25 super-stocks registered with the Vancouver Island Track Racing Association this year — so competition should be spirited.

Rick O'Dell, who finished first in super-stock ranks last season, will share driving duties with Ron Hancock during local meets in Rick's old car, a 1963 Plymouth.

O'Dell will also pilot a '68 Plymouth, which he recently acquired from Yakima, on the National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing's northwest circuit.

Hancock sold his car from last year and John Currier will be taking the wheel.

Larry Walker, runner-up in the division last year, won't be running now, but plans to enter the NASCAR circuit later this season with a car now being assembled.

The third-place finisher, Bill Price, has retired from racing.

Stepping up to the division are ex-stocker drivers Wayne Dalby, Vic Bing and Rod Caddell as well as Mike Barto, who collected rookie-of-the-year honors in the claimer division last season.

Machines piloted by Ross "Kiwi" McIntyre, Roy Haslam, Bob Collins and Terry Forsythe all looked good in recent practice sessions. Larry Pollard, Jim Steen (who's been racing at Western all those 20 years), Jerrie Ferrie and Jim Caudwell are also among returning drivers who were consistent challengers last year.

In addition to Greater Victoria pilots, Jack Gold heads three or four super-stock drivers who will be making the trip from Nanaimo. Larry Christie of Courtenay is also expected to compete.

Tony Johnson and Rick Cudby, close one-two finishers in the stock car division last season, will be back and should be top contenders again.

Johnson's '56 Ford, badly damaged in a garage fire two weeks ago, appeared battered but running at a practice session last weekend.

TOMMY AARON

TONY JACKLIN

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — When Gay Brewer sees green—the color of U.S. currency and also the color of the Masters' jacket—he acknowledges all sorts of chemical reactions stir up in his sinewy, 175-pound frame.

"The adrenalin starts flowing," the 41-year-old veteran with the white-flecked hair and snub Babe Ruth face says. "I get nervous and excited. I concentrate more. My swing improves. I hit with greater ease.

"I just want to go out and get 'em."

Brewer was the man most players feared as the 37th Masters golf tournament went into the last-half showdown today with a four-way tie at the head of the elite pack and defending champion Jack Nicklaus' putter colder than a slab of dead steel.

"It's been a long time since I've had a stretch as bad as that," Nicklaus said, looking back on a collapse that saw him lose five strokes in the space of four holes. "It shatters a man."

The golden-haired Goliath stumbled and fumbled to a five-over-par 77 that left him five shots back of Brewer and a trio of other tour regulars tied at 141—Tommy Aaron, Bob Dickson and J. C. Snead.

But the big move was made by Brewer, who stormed back from an opening 75 with a brilliant six-under-par 66 that allowed him to pick up 11 shots on the heavily favored Nicklaus, bidding for his fifth Masters crown.

The top Canadian was amateur Gary Cowan of Kitchener, Ont., who carded a 78 after shooting a 74 Thursday but his 152 total was one off the cut. George Knudson of Toronto fired a 77 Friday for a two-round-total of 156.

Former American and British Open champion Tony Jacklin also was a victim of the cut with a 152 total.

Brewer's surge was all the more remarkable when one considers that this time a year ago the 1967 winner was lying flat on his back in an Augusta hospital with tubes in his nose and needles in his arms, fighting for his life.

Stricken with a gastric ulcer on the eve of the 1972 tournament, Brewer lay near death. Eight transfusions helped restore him to his feet again.

Going into today's third round, only five other players besides the four leaders were under Augusta's par and five were even. Puerto Rico's Chi Chi Rodriguez, chipping in for birdies on the final two holes and using only 22 putts, was a shot out of the lead with 72-70—142, followed by former champion Bob Goalby, 73-70; Grier Jones, 71-72; Britain's Peter Oosterhuis, 73-70, and Masashi "Jumbo" Ozaki, the long-hitting former baseball player from Tokyo, 69-74, all tied at 143.

The even-par-144 group included tour stalwarts Gardner Dickinson, 74-70; Jim Jamieson, 73-71; Mason Rudolph, 72-72; young John Miller, 75-69, and New Zealand's left-handed Bob Charles, 74-70.

BOOKS OFF HOOK

AUGUSTA, Ga (AP) — British bookies could heave a sigh of relief Friday. Nobody collected on the 5000-1 shot, Trevor Homer, in the Masters golf tournament.

Homer, quoted by Ladbrooke's of London as 5000-1 to win, 500-1 to make the cut and 50-1 to place in the top 24, skidded to a second-round 88 for a 36-hole score of 169 which left him the second highest scorer in the field of 82 and out of the tournament.

Veteran Gene Sarazen shot 88-86—174. He is 71 years old.

Homer, 29, took a 10 on the 13th hole.

"Shocking," said the 29-year-old British Amateur champion.

Touch of Leniency For Open Starters

By ERNIE FEDORUK

Times Staff

Host professional Dick Silverberg says Glen Meadows will be "leniently prepared," but still anticipates "a minimum of sub-par" scoring in Sunday's qualifying round for the CFAX Vancouver Island Open golf tournament.

The 18-hole qualifying test at the McTavish Road layout has drawn a starting field of 168, including nine professionals and 159 amateurs.

The low 32 gross scorers qualify for match-play along with 32 low net scorers who will campaign in the handicap division. Four successive rounds of match play will bring finalists back to Glen Meadows on May 13.

Sunday's emphasis is on making the grade into the qualifying round.

Silverberg said Friday pin placements will be "made very reasonable" and foursomes will tee off from the white (normal) tees rather than from between the championship (blue) blocks.

"We're not going to try and make it uncomfortable for anyone," said Silverberg. "The greens have been coming around nicely, and golfers are starting to get some extra roll with the course drying out."

Still, scoring may prove to be difficult on the par 36-36—72 course, the longest on Vancouver Island.

"I don't think anyone will beat par (72)," predicted Silverberg. "And it won't surprise me if the cutoff for the championship flight is around 81 or 82."

The heavy favorite to walk off with the qualifying medal is Cowichan's Bill Wakeham. Last year's medallist with a two-under 68 at Royal Colwood Wakeham was the only player, of those reporting scores, to match par at Glen Meadows this week. He scored a 72 Wednesday.

Also to be regarded in the medallist sweepstakes are a quartet of Glen Meadows members — club champion Marty Richards; southpaw Hal Jacobsen, a co-holder of the unofficial course record of 69; newcomer Mike Pyke, a former Willingdon Cupper from Alberta, and Al Zimmerman, the retired professional who bowed to Vaughan Trapp on the 37th hole of last year's championship final.

First foursomes start moving off the tee at 7:30 a.m. with the last group starting at 1:06 p.m.

Players Threaten Legal Action To Prevent Merger of Leagues

MONTREAL (CP) — The National Hockey League Players' Association announced Friday its intention to take legal action to prevent any merger of the NHL and the World Hockey Association unless it receives assurances no further merger talks will be held.

Alan Eagleson and Ken Dryden, executive director and president of the association respectively, told a news conference steps to enjoin a possible merger will be taken immediately if the association has not received by next Friday a written guarantee that no merger will be discussed.

"Any merger would bring a substantial reduction in salaries and, for that reason alone, we oppose it," Eagleson said. Action would be taken simultaneously in U.S. federal court and in Canada under the Combines Act.

"If we don't receive a letter from the NHL saying they won't discuss it further, we'll take these steps."

The Toronto lawyer said he is confident a merger of the two leagues would violate U.S. anti-trust laws and the players had told him "to instruct counsel to take the necessary steps to preserve their rights regarding the merger."

Eagleson said the player representatives of all 16 NHL teams have told him they are against the merger. The players of Boston Bruins, New York Rangers and Montreal Canadiens had already voted to oppose a merger and the members of all teams would be canvassed.

The decision to take legal action followed a meeting between NHL and WHA officials last weekend to consider a possible merger. Eagleson said Ben Hatskin, owner of the WHA Winnipeg Jets, and Bill Jennings, president of the NHL Rangers, had attended the meeting.

Clarence Campbell, NHL president, said he was aware of the meeting but declined to comment because it had no offical status.

"As a result of the meeting," Eagleson said, "relations between owners and players have been largely destroyed.

"Accordingly, the players' association has retained Ira M. Millstein of the New York City law firm of Weil, Gotshal and Manges as anti-trust counsel and given him instructions to prepare a complaint for filing in the federal district court in New York City to enjoin any merger of these two leagues.

"Mr. Millstein represented the players of the National Basketball Association in their successful 1970 suit to prevent the National and American Basketball Associations from entering a merger."

Eagleson said the weekend merger discussion was "a complete betrayal of good faith" by the owners. As a result of the talks, negotiations on an adjustment to the NHL reserve clause "have come to an abrupt end."

"The basis of the negotiation was to obtain freedom for a player within the NHL and also the WHA. Now the owners are turning to remove the best bargaining lever a player holds."

NHL players have been trying to change the reserve clause which binds a player to a particular team within that league unless he is released by the team.

Some players got around the clause last year by signing with teams in the fledgling WHA.

Legal action was taken by several NHL teams in an attempt to reclaim such players but Eaglerson said "court decisions so far would seem to indicate players can legally change leagues at the end of their contracts."

Fifth Loss Keeps Poles In Basement

MOSCOW (AP) — West Germany battled Friday night to its first victory of the world hockey championship by defeating Poland, 4-2.

It was the Polish squad's fifth straight defeat and left them in the cellar of the six-team tournament for the 1973 crown.

The West Germans now have a 1-4 record.

There were no other games Friday, but the Soviet Union and Sweden, both with 4-0 records and a share of first place, clash today.

Cambridge Crew Wins

LONDON (Reuter) — Cambridge defeated Oxford on the River Thames today in the annual boat race between the two universities.

Cambridge plowed through rough water at the start and took an early lead over the S-shaped course of four miles and 374 yards.

Oxford, stroked by U.S. Olympic oarsman Dave Sawyier from South Portland, Me., was more than 10 lengths behind at the finish.

Sawyier got his eight-oared crew off to a fantastic rate of 41 strokes in the first minute. But after a few hundred yards Oxford's rate dropped to 35 and Cambridge took the lead.

Cambridge now has won the race 67 times to Oxford's 51.

The last six races went to Cambridge.

HEIMAEY ISLAND, Iceland (AP) — It's like being in another world.

Walking in volcanic ash 30 feet deep. Plodding down a dormer street along the roofs of former homes.

Resting on a chimney.

The ash is granular. Like tons of cereal. It makes a crunchy sound when the foot hits and sinks a few inches. Soles of the shoes turn warm.

Bits of volcanic ash, some the size of marbles ping the hard hats all visitors must wear.

Some of the bigger rocks are still hot. But they soon cool in the zero weather and 45-knot winds.

This is Heimaey Island.

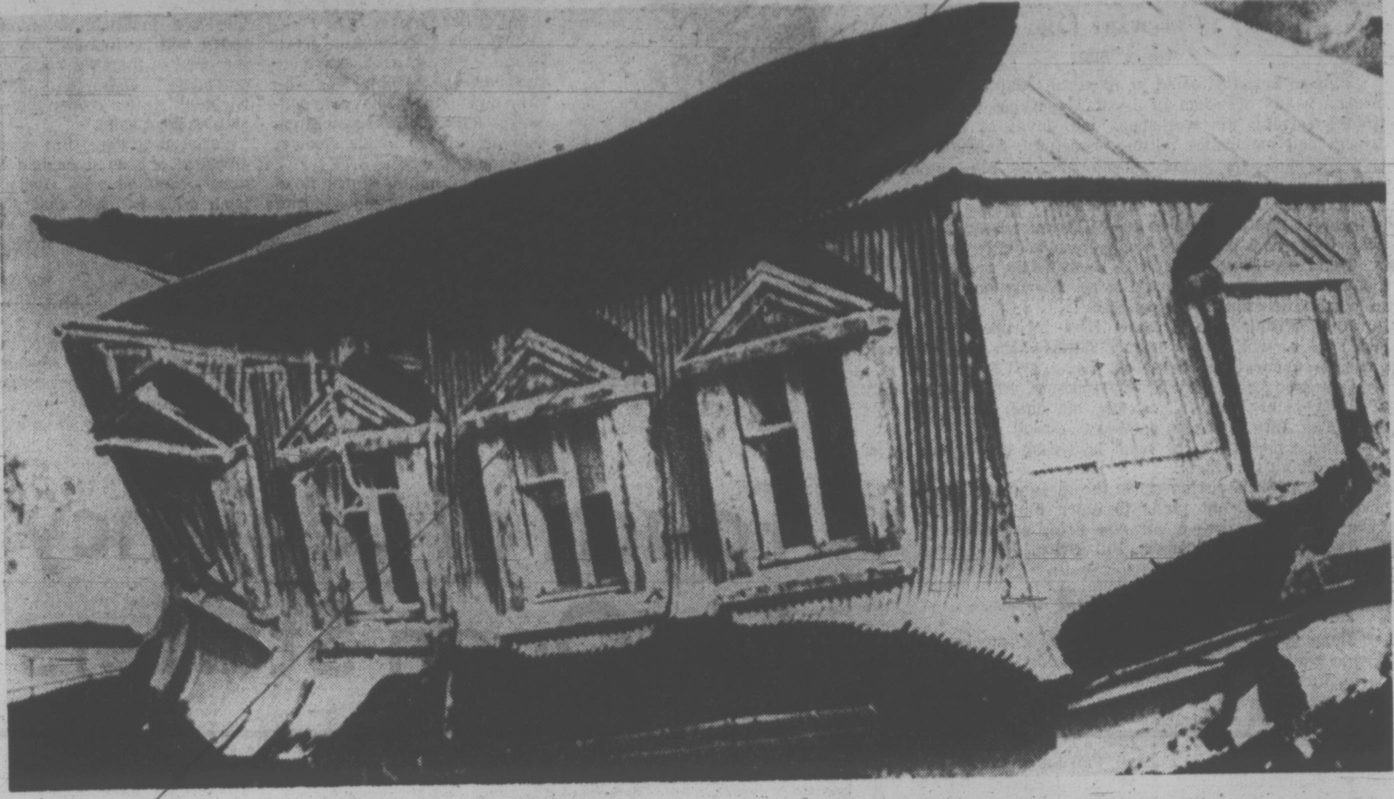
The lone hotel has 20 rooms, all taken by those allowed to stay, police, civil defence and Red Cross Workers.

There are no civilians. Visitors can come only by special government permit.

It's 13 hours by fishing boat from Reykjavik, 40 minutes by chartered plane.

It is an isolated land.

The victim of the volcano.



An Insurance Man Who Sells Himself

TORONTO (CP) — Reuben Schafer sells insurance worth from $10 to $14 million in an average year and says he does it without high-pressure tactics.

When he entered the business 23 years ago, he was determined not to be the insurance agent stereotype, which he described as the pest who relentlessly badgered people to buy a policy.

"I made up my mind that people were going to come to me," he said.

Enough have come to enable him to lead the worldwide sales force of the Occidental Life Insurance Co. of California for 15 years in a row. He earns an average yearly commission of $104,000.

To get people to come to him, Mr. Schafer engages in a multi-faceted advertising program.

He has bought space in billboards, in newspapers and in journals read by doctors, lawyers, accountants and business executives.

When potential customers enter his Toronto office, some have trouble believing it is the work place of a pillar of the insurance business.

Mr. Schafer doesn't believe in spending money on lavish quarters to impress clients.

An ancient, flat-topped desk occupies the centre of his office. It's piled high with telephones, tape recorders, papers, files and gadgets. The sides of the desk are adorned with signs saying things like, "I may look busy but I'm just confused."

"When you're as great as I am, it's hard to be humble," says another. Dangling from the ceiling is an over-sized brassiere, with the words, "Sophia Loren slept here."

Mr. Schafer, called Rube, dresses casually at work in an open-neck sports shirt and rumpled slacks with frayed pockets.

"My well-dressed clients envy my free-and-easy style," he said.

In his office, he keeps steel cabinets full of thousands of jokes. He thinks nothing of phoning a friend or client in Los Angeles or Miami to pass on a new joke he just heard.

But despite his appearance and the disarray of his office, he is superbly organized. His business success is based on careful planning.

ISSUES NEWSLETTER

He regularly sends out a newsletter to thousands of clients, "almost clients" and prospects. In addition to plugging the insurance business, the newsletter is adorned with amusing cartoons and offers information on a variety of subjects ranging from the care of an aching back to how to mix drinks.

He gives away all types of free promotional things to prospects and clients such as golf markers, childrens' height charts and desk calendars.

He also offers personal attention. He will send reprints of medical items to doctors, copies of discussions on the aims of education to school principals and newspaper editorials on osteopathy to osteopaths.

For years, Mr. Schafer has meticulously analyzed and dissected every client contact that failed to produce a signed application for an insurance policy.

He freely confesses fear of failure is the motivating force in his life.

"It haunts me, it drives me," he said. "Maybe my fear of failure is tied up with the insecurity of my childhood."

He was raised in midtown Toronto, the son of poor European immigrants.

He worked his way through the faculty of forestry at the University of Toronto but abandoned forestry after a year of graduate work in which he specialized in the life cycle of the destructive budworm.

Mr. Schafer looked to other fields and after some study decided he wanted to sell only cheap "term" insurance, the kind that involves no more than a benefit payment on death, rather than more expensive insurance.

A number of insurance companies rejected his application and he became convinced that most companies had anti-term insurance and anti-Semitic prejudices. Thus to save time, his opening line to employment managers was "I'm Jewish and I want to sell term insurance."

The man at Occidental Life replied: "That's fine. You can start today."

Peaches Never Seduced

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (Reuter) — A North American woman recently wrote to a daily newspaper bemoaning the fact that she had never been seduced by a Barbadian.

Few people took the letter seriously. It was clear that Peaches La Tour, as she signed herself, was only taking a sarcastic dig at a controversy over women's dress started by an Anglican dean here.

In a sermon, the Dean of St. Michael's Cathedral, Very Rev. Harold Critchlow, a Barbadian, denounced the wearing of miniskirts as an incitement to some men to rape and accused tourists of destroying the morals of the society with their revealing apparel.

"They have heard or read of the sexual prowess of the Negro male—true or imaginary—and they leave home with one object in view," said the dean. "And all of us know that object."

DEAN DISTURBED

Ten years ago, a former dean declared in a sermon: "The parsons today endure the sight of a greater area of naked bosom from low necks and I am yet to be convinced that all of them retain their saintly aplomb when they accidentally see an unusually great length of legs appearing below a short, tight skirt in the front pew."

Although Dean Critchlow did not break new ground in his denunciation, he won wide public support.

He said some tourists should be arrested for indecent exposure and many people, writing to the Barbados Advocate-News, agreed with him.

SOME DISAGREE

Dean Critchlow's linking of mini-wearing with rape, which is reported to be on the increase, is debatable for many here.

It has been argued that many rape victims have not been the alluring, trendy girls parading along the streets but conventionally-garbed women.

However, the dean is not alone in his assessment of the situation. In Guyana, where a spate of rape cases was recently reported, the mayor of Georgetown, Mrs. Beryl Simon, reprimanded young and old for wearing the most revealing attire possible, which she said was partly responsible for the attacks.

Mayor Simon clamped a ban on mini-minis in the precincts of the Georgetown city hall. There must be a limit to how short minipants or skirts should be, she said.

Inflation Hits Israel

By ARTHUR MAX

TEL AVIV (AP) — Israel is beginning a new fiscal year with government economists admitting what the average worker has known for a long time—that things are not as good as they look.

Israel has undergone almost unprecedented growth since 1970 and "most sectors of the population have benefited," says Aharon Gilshon, deputy director of the Bank of Israel's research department.

"But the seeds have been sown of forces that threaten to wipe out our achievements of the past few years within a year or two."

A maintenance technician for El Al Airlines, disagrees that the man on the street has shared in Israel's boom. The technician—let's call him David Barzalai since he prefers not to be named—says that although El Al employees are among the best paid in Israel, "I don't have any more money in my pocket than last year."

"They just put it in one pocket and pull it out of another. I still have to struggle to make it to the end of the month."

ROBBED BY INFLATION

The force that worries Gilshon—and robs Barzalai of the extra money he has twice gone on strike to get—is inflation.

Israel's economy in 1972-73 recorded a 9½-per-cent growth in the gross national product.

As a further bonus to the working citizen, the country has managed to reduce defence expenditures in real terms, leaving more money for public services, Gilshon said in an interview.

Gilshon and other economists list several indicators to prove that the economy is blossoming in prosperity:

—The negative balance of payments, or the difference between imports and exports, declined to $1 million last year from 1.25 million in 1970.

—Private consumption per capita, or the amount of goods each citizen bought, jumped by six per cent last year.

"And these improvements took place while our level of investment grew by 10 per cent, insuring the economy will grow in the future," Gilshon said.

But these glowing indicators are having a negative effect on the economy, applying multisided upward pressure on prices.

FEAR LABOR DISPUTES

Rising prices mean rising discontent and labor disputes, which could hit the economy hard enough to cancel the recent gains, Gilshon and others fear.

Just recently, prices rose on sugar, flour and frozen meat. The cost of gasoline went up to nearly 80 cents a gallon.

The government says 235,000 workdays were lost in 1972 in strikes, compared with 178,000 the previous year. More were lost through slowdown campaigns, and the strike forecast for this year is gloomy.

700 'GAY' CLUBS AT U.K. UNIVERSITIES

EXETER, England (AP) — Britain's students launched a campaign Thursday to end what it termed prejudice against homosexuals and set up a chain of 700 "gay" clubs on university and college campuses.

Leaders of the National Union of Students, holding its annual conference here, said 25,000 of the 500,000 NUS members are gay.

A resolution, which was passed overwhelmingly, said the prevailing attitude of prejudice and hostility caused homosexuals to live in isolation, loneliness and despair.

The students said children should be taught at school that homosexuality is a natural and acceptable sexual attitude.

American Critical Of Anti-U.S. Aid

VANCOUVER (CP) — An American anti-war activist Thursday criticized the governments of Russia and China for not giving adequate support to the North Vietnamese in their war with the United States.

Uyd Stapleton of New York city, said Russia provided only $100 million in military aid to North Vietnam in 1971 while China contributed only $75 million the same year.

"True, the North Vietnamese did shoot down many B-52 bombers with rockets provided by the Soviet Union," he said. "But they were obsolete rockets shooting down obsolete aircraft.

"There is no way the United States would use its B-52's against the sophisticated rockets which the Soviet Union now possess," he said.

WARDAIR CANADA LIMITED has to be the greatest success story in Canadian Aviation history.

We at Four Seasons Travel are very proud indeed to be associated with this fine airline; an airline that has set and constantly maintained the standard of excellence for every carrier in the world transporting passengers by air.

A major factor in the overwhelming acceptance by the vacationing public of Wardair, apart from the superb in-flight service, is the certain knowledge that in its entire 25 year history this Company has never ever stranded or inconvenienced a single passenger and offers an on-time record second to none!

Last Monday, April 2nd, the Vancouver Airport Tower cleared the first Wardair departure thus starting the 1973 Charter-Flight season, and if anything at all on that day was predictable, Wardair were!

Scheduled to depart at 7 p.m., a fast smooth Boeing 707 took off for London, England, at EXACTLY 7 p.m., flew 183 happy holidaymakers four thousand seven hundred and eighty-three miles over the great circle polar route, landing precisely as pre-announced at twenty minutes past one in the afternoon!

Our association with Wardair goes back over the past eight years, and is an exclusive one on our part. Four Seasons Travel in Victoria has grown from the original small intimate agency into substantial centrally located premises with five well trained personnel, each with many hours flying time, and all of us dedicated to providing you with first class travel service, we assure you of a personal attention, that to say the least, is uncommon, which we believe is responsible for and allows us to say in print, that Four Seasons Travel has sold more seats for Wardair Canada Ltd. to Victorians on the A.B.C. programme than any other travel agency on Vancouver Island . . . the source of that happy information is Wardair themselves!

Wardair flights during April and May are now full, though there is a chance for space on a standby basis; many dates in June and July are nearing full capacity and we do urge you to reserve summer and fall space right away.

For those of you who plan to wing their way to Hawaii with Wardair this fall you cannot be too early to make your reservations, naturally, for these flights no deposits are needed.

Unstable Money Places Canada In Trade Pinch

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada will face a tough world-trade market during the next five years unless nations can agree on a stable monetary system, says Finance Minister John Turner.

He told a service club Wednesday night, that the world needs "a new international currency."

"Canada sells abroad 25 per cent of what we produce. If we're going to depend on foreign trade we have to know what price we can get for our goods, and what we can afford to export."

But with an unstable currency situation, Canada's markets could dry up, he said.

"Canada, and underdeveloped countries, which sell a lot of primary products and have a large debt, either from foreign investment or foreign aid, are particularly sensitive to unsteady economic situations."

MUST HAVE ACCESS

Special drawing rights on a central currency pool, concessional rights for developing countries and provisions for debts incurred in producing employment in third world countries, must be considered by international economists in the attempt to solve the monetary crisis, he said.

"We must ensure that Canada and its developing partners retain our rights of access to the markets of the big trading nations."

If a satisfactory central currency system is not achieved, the world will be splintered into trading blocs dominated by the European Economic Community, the U.S. and Japan, he said.

"Where will Canada fit into a world where the British are becoming more European than the Europeans and are forgetting their old friends and trading partners?"

City of London Besieged Again

By CAROL KENNEDY

LONDON (CP) — The City of London, that tight little island of influence, money and power in the heart of sprawling Greater London, is under siege once more from politicians who regard its 12th-century independent status as an anachronism in the 1970s.

The famous "Square Mile" of banks, brokers and exchanges, which influences the money markets of the world, rules its affairs independently of County Hall, seat of the Greater London Council (GLC), and even operates its own 800-strong police force.

In 1960, a royal commission on London's local government conceded the position was illogical but decided "logic has its limits and the City of London lies outside them. . . . This is an anomaly but we recommend that this anomaly should continue."

The latest controversy was set off by a dramatic event—the terrorist bomb explosions in central London on the day of the Ulster border referendum March 8. The bigger of the two blasts went off outside the Old Bailey central criminal court in the City, injuring more than 230 persons.

WARNING DELAYED

Subsequently, it turned out that a warning about the bomb location, passed to The Times by an anonymous telephone caller and thence to the Metropolitan Police at Scotland Yard, was delayed because of a mixup in communications between the Yard and the City of London force.

City Police Commissioner James Page later admitted there had been a "human error" at the switchboard, with the result that City police did not begin clearing the Old Bailey area until shortly before the blast.

A question was immediately asked in Parliament and the City's independent status now is something of a political issue, with the opposition Labor party making abolition a plank in its platform for London's local government elections April 12.

The Observer newspaper compared the City's situation to that of "an isolated Ruritanian island like Liechtenstein." The paper in an editorial even drew a comparison with the old British comedy film Passport to Pimlico, when the Pimlico district of London supposedly declared itself independent and set up frontier posts and customs.

TOUCHES SWORD

The City doesn't, of course, go that far. The only "frontier" legacy remaining is the tradition that the monarch, when visiting the City, stops at Temple Bar on its western edge and touches a sword proffered by the lord mayor. Any demarcation that once existed between the two police forces now has disappeared, and both City and Metropolitan officers move freely in each other's domains.

Furthermore, the bulk of the rich real-estate taxes reaped by the City Corporation at Guildhall, its magnificent Gothic headquarters, is spread around the rest of the metropolis.

Labor's policy in the local elections will be that the City first granted its charter just after the Norman Conquest but formally made an independent county by King Henry I in 1132, should be absorbed in the Greater London Council.

Labor chief whip Robert Mellish says the title of lord mayor—who ranks as London's first citizen and receives all visiting heads of state in the City—now has "no justification and should be given to the chairman of the GLC."

More radically still, he suggested the normously wealthy City district should be merged administratively with poverty-stricken Tower Hamlets, a grimy stretch of East End including Bow, Mile End, and the Whitechapel alleys where Jack the Ripper roamed in the 1880s.

"It would be a great help to Tower Hamlets," said Mellish in a classic understatement, "to have the rateable values (property tax assessments) of the City added to its valuation lists."

Sir Reginald Goodwin, chief Labor spokesman on the Conservative-ruled GLC, calls the City's status an "anachronism" and says it gives the impression of privilege and wealth within a small area. He agrees Tower Hamlets is "the natural heir."

Ironically, the present lord mayor of the City, Lord Mais, is a Labor peer, but says he would vote against any attempt to absorb the City and its Corporation.

"It works," he said, "and one shouldn't do anything to disturb something which functions and on which the economy of the country depends.

"The City is a very finely balanced instrument and I don't think it lends itself to the normal form of local government, though I dare say it would get used to it after about 100 years."

BANKING CENTRE

The City, where some 400,000 work by day but only 7,500 reside, is a world removed from the grim Victorian tenements and Cockney street markets of Tower Hamlets.

Within its 677 acres and 48 miles of streets are the London Stock Exchange, the commodity markets, shipping exchanges, Lloyd's insurance brokers, the largest fur market in the world, the Bank of England and the headquarters of every British national bank as well as rich and influential private merchant banks like N. M. Rothschild and Baring Brothers.

The members of the 84 "livery companies," descended from the medieval craft guilds, are prominent business leaders and many of their historic livery halls are crammed with antique plate and other treasures.

Yet the City is far from being a parasite on Greater London—indeed, it contributes four-fifths of its property taxes to GLC coffers. That will add up to more than £54 million (about $130 million) in the next financial year.

Freighter Sinks

ALGIERS (Reuter) — A polish freighter, the Wroclaw-2, sank in the Mediterranean Wednesday. Algiers maritime radio said the crew of about 30 was rescued by the French naval ship Guepratte.

COMPUTER STUDY URGED

TORONTO (CP) — The president of the Canadian Bar Association called Friday for a study to show to what degree computers have robbed Canadians of their privacy.

L. Philippe de Grandpre of Montreal told the association's Ontario branch that "the computer has created the means of destroying completely our privacy."

"Methods must therefore be devised to limit its damaging effects and, by the same token, to increase itst rue usefulness," he said.

The association president said that the computer "magnifies considerably the consequences of an error, be it due to human weakness or mechanical failure."

De Grandpre said detailed, personal information on all citizens is available through employment questionnaires and records, school records, medical records, income tax returns, social security files, credit records and bank records.

"The net result is that less and less is the private citizen in a position to protect hifnself against the general dissemination of information which was meant to remain private and confidential."

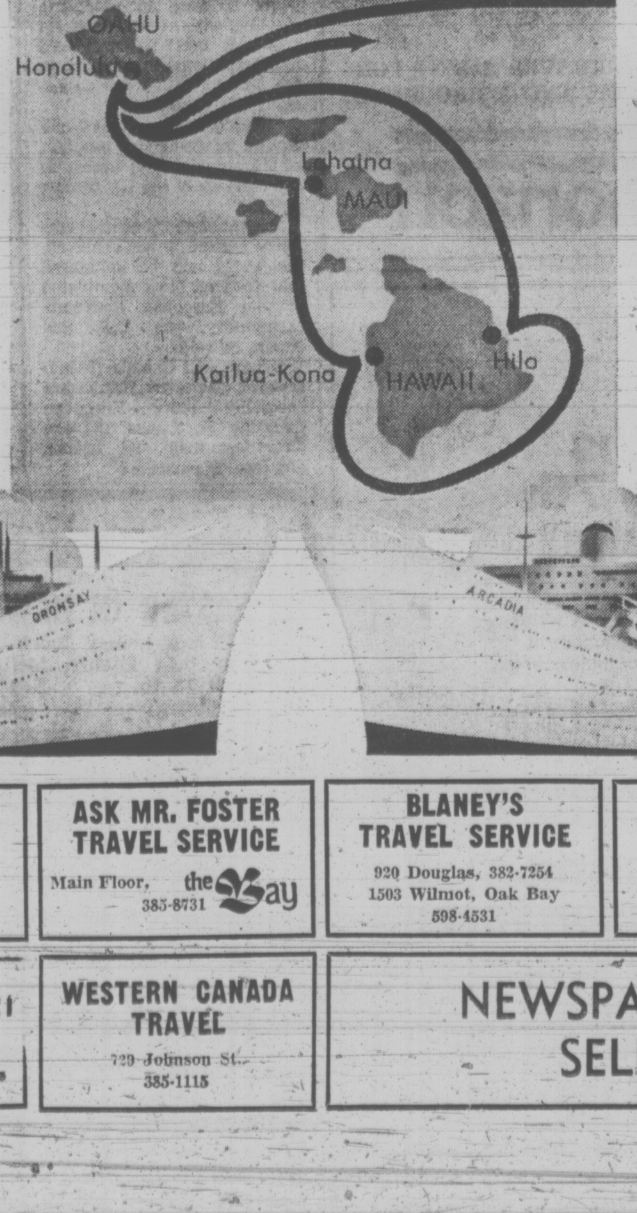
Cruise to Hawaii with P&O.
Two weeks, four island ports.
From $440.



For a fortunate few, there is a different Hawaii.
It is the Hawaii that can only be experienced aboard a ship. Where islands appear as dots on the horizon and draw slowly nearer, their mountain peaks shrouded in mist and clouds.
Where cruising coastal waters reveals unforgettable views of rain forests, quiet coves, and jet black beaches of volcanic sand.
P&O invites you to discover this Hawaii in First Class comfort aboard our Oronsay or Arcadia, both registered in Britain, and offering passengers all the friendly service and gracious hospitality of an English country inn.
You'll make two calls at Honolulu. Then visit the historic old whaling port of Lahaina. Kailua-Kona with its deserted temples. Hilo, rich in the color and fragrance of orchids, gardenias, and anthurium by the million.
Oronsay and Arcadia will make three cruises this spring, ranging in length from 14 to 18 days. You can sail from Vancouver on May 21, June 4, or June 21. Cruise fares on these all-First Class ships are as low as $440 (based on double occupancy), including transportation, meals and entertainment.
We've prepared a colorful, 16-page booklet to tell you more about our Hawaii and the big white P&O liners that take you there. Ask your travel agent for a copy. Or send in the coupon today.

What You Need to Be With NEED

By GLENNIS ZILM

OTTAWA (CP) — If you're a great listener, can keep a secret, are mature, understanding and have good common sense, then you are the ideal person to man a distress centre.

Those are are ideal characteristics, Pat Delbridge of the Ottawa Distress Centre told a national meeting of delegates from such suicide prevention centres Friday.

However, you also have to be something else: A volunteer, willing to become involved in a low-budget but worthwhile enterprise.

"Our main problem is funding," she said. Every one of the 66 suicide-prevention centres she surveyed last winter had problems raising money.

One of the purposes of the four-day convention attended by about 400 delegates from across Canada is to find out how they can get money.

Despite the impressive list of characteristics of the ideal "line person" panelists later described the rigid training volunteers take before they are "put on the line" to help distressed callers.

David Stewart of Need, a call-in crisis centre in Victoria, described the screening of applicants before admission to training. As well, all line-workers, as he called those who man the telephones, must have supervision and continuing education during the time they work.

Some volunteers say the screening programs and training are "worse than applying for a job," said Helen Ward of Ottawa. But "being a volunteer is no easy task."

The crisis centres described by various penelists showed wide variation. The only link with the distressed caller at some was the telephone, but others had "flying squads" of workers who visit potential suicides.

Other centres ran a variety of services, including classes in yoga or physical fitness or worked with drug addicts or prisoners.

Centres faced two choices: They could remain outside the health care system, but they then would lack funds and also the necessary co-ordination in referring potential suicides for psychiatric help.

The other choice was to take a new role—"the trained volunteer." This trained person already is getting to be referred to as a "crisis worker" or "mental health counsellor," he said. But with this new role for the centre and the volunteer comes a lessening of freedom.

The workers require job descriptions and more defined roles, he said.

WASTE DUMPED IN OCEAN 'NO SERIOUS CONCERN'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After studying the coastal waters off southern California for three years, a group of researchers has concluded "there is little cause for serious concern" about the dumping of wastes into the ocean.

In most cases, the current procedures for disposing of municipal waste are adequately controlled to protect the marine environment, says the report.

However, said the scientists, there are unacceptably high levels of DDT in some areas even though a major source of the chemical — a DDT manufacturing plant in Los Angeles County that was emitting excessive quantities — was controlled in 1970.

"The discharge of DDT through waste water has brought with it a number of ills that have not yet been reversed by its partial control," the study said.

The report was issued by the Southern California Coastal Water Research Project.

The waste water is beneficial in the case of phytoplankton — tiny, aquatic plants that are the basis of the marine food chain, the report said. Substances usually found in the wastes provide nutrients for phytoplankton, which are expected to increase gradually as waste dumping continues.

(Division of Vancouver Island Coach Lines)

Visit over 7 cities, 3 countries, 2 islands and one rock. And stay in the same hotel.

This summer, Air Canada would like to suggest a most unusual hotel. It offers a comfortable room with champagne and fruit to greet you, all meals (including morning coffee or tea in your suite), free movies, restaurants, bars, pools, even a ballroom. And drinks and wine at astonishingly low prices.

The real beauty of it is, you can see Spain, Morocco, the Canaries and Portugal—without having to pack and unpack your bags.

Sure, it's a ship! And from under $30 a day (based on double occupancy) you can have it all; 8 days in a first class hotel in London (with sightseeing and an Elizabethan banquet)—and 13 fabulous days cruising on the famous P & O liner Orsova.

If the sun-drenched Mediterranean seaports aren't for you, then perhaps a cruise to Greece, or around the Aegean or Black Seas, or to the Balkans, might do the trick.

In fact, Air Canada can give you nearly 50 cruises to choose from this summer—and to make it easy, we've put them all into one big colourful book, along with 70 other equally exciting vacation values. So why not pick up your copy? It's free, from your travel agent or us. Air Canada.

Wake to your steward's gentle knock, and like a latter day Jean Harlow enjoy a cup of steaming coffee, propped up in bed. Or go up on deck and let the bracing sea air and crisp Mediterranean morning sunshine work up an appetite that'd put a truck driver to shame, before going into breakfast.

You're on holidays aren't you—so why shouldn't every day start just like this if you feel like it? •

This summer, Air Canada has 50 cruises all around Europe. So let's look at one and see the kind of things you get: your holiday starts with 6 days in a first class hotel with breakfast in London. A sightseeing tour will show you the main points of interest, then all of London is yours to explore; the palaces, the pubs, the galleries, the markets—with a complimentary Elizabethan banquet to round it all out.

Then, down to your floating hotel at Southampton—for 13 days of almost sinful pampering and pleasure.

First, to Spain's unspoiled Vigo with its fascinating ancient quarter of winding streets, quaint houses and little squares.

Then to Malaga, one of Spain's oldest cities on the Andalusian coast. Time to discover museums and Moorish castles before you hit "The Rock". (Just as in Nelson's time, the sailors' taverns and shops of Gibraltar teem with interesting people and bargain-buys).

Step back into the "Arabian Nights" when you reach Casablanca in Morocco and shop the bazaars for rich, embroidered rugs and leatherware—or take in a tribal reception at Azzemour.

The exquisite warm islands of the Canaries and Madeira round out your holiday before 2 days of leisurely cruising back to Southampton and London, where your hotel is waiting for another 2 nights.

All this, for only $689 based on double occupancy. Work it out, for 23 days that's under $30 a day including meals on your cruise, taxes and transfers!

We've only quoted prices for land (and sea) arrangements here. So now let's look at the best way to get you there.

Our Economy Excursion fares remain the best buy. No other fare offers you so much flexibility and so many freedoms, at such a reasonable price. You decide to which of Air Canada's eleven European destinations you want to go, when you want to go and for how long. And you book when you like.

Once in Europe you can tour around and return from a different Air Canada gateway from the one you arrive at—and you can even change your travel dates in either direction. You can also make stopovers for a small additional charge and your children under 12 fly at reduced rates.

Whichever way you look at it, from fares to ground packages, we've covered all the ways to give you the finest, most flexible holiday for your money. And it's all explained in our holiday guide. Why not pick up a copy? It's free from your travel agent or us.

Or mail the coupon and we'll send you a copy.

Designs Offered Home Craftsmen

Starting today, the Victoria Times is offering a special Saturday feature designed for home craftsmen.

Each Saturday, there will be a picture and plan description by Deco-Plans, featuring projects ranging from portable bars and kitchen cabinets to carports and garden furniture.

The first two plans are for a storage wall, above, and a refreshment centre, below.

Plan No: 70 (Price $2)

Pattern a wall with functional modules of storage spaces. Books, bric-a-brac, collector items, what have you — all add decorative interest to the wall. Doors cover some areas for handy concealed storage of less picturesque items. The unit shown is 12 feet wide, 8 feet high, and 18 inches deep, and is divided into mathematically precise cubicles.

Cut edging and framing from 1x12 pine shelving, the back and doors from ¼-inch hardboard, and the shelves and dividers from ⅝-inch particle board. Choose and place colors carefully for the most striking effect.

Plan No: 101 (Price $2)

This refreshment centre is another project popular with young people and adults alike. It's just the thing to make entertainment in your basement recreation room a breeze.

Whether the party is just a few teenagers spinning records or a full-fledged get-together, this centre operates with equal ease. There is a big container for ice, all the room you'll ever need for storing beverages and equipment, and a plastic laminated top and work surface that ignores spills.

General Arrested

SEOUL, Korea (AP) — Maj.-Gen. Yoon Pil-yong, once one of President Chung Hee Park's most trusted men, has been arrested for court-martial on charges including wholesale corruption, informed sources said Friday. Yoon was dismissed as commander of the capital garrison command and taken into custody about March 10, the informants said.

Food Aisles Site Of Super Races

TORONTO (CP) — Suddenly, across the country, supermarkets have become super raceways.

Throughout the week, housewives have been getting on their marks and, at the right command, heading for the food counters in a five-minute grab-all — with a soft-drink company picking up the tab in the promotion contest.

It's a great spectator sport.

Five-hundred jammed the Cornwall, Ont., supermarket where Janet Jasmin was doing the 50-foot sprint along the meat counter.

"They were hanging from the light fixtures," said manager George Bandy.

Technique is also involved: No turning corners for Mrs. Jasmin; she kept on the straight for more speed.

By end-of-play she'd crammed six shopping carts with $1,154.43 worth of food, mostly meat.

"She did a terrific job under pressure," said Bandy, who has arranged for her to take her winnings in credit the average suburban refrigerator isn't equipped to take all those roasts, hams, pork chops and chickens.

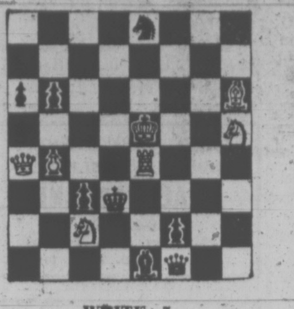
International Chess Master
PROBLEM
By A. DOMBROVSKI,
Poland
BLACK: 8



WHITE: 7

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

PACHMAN IS FREE

Grandmaster Ludek Pachman is one of those brave souls who simply cannot hold his peace when he confronts injustice. For the past three years he has spent a great deal of time in and out of Czechoslovakian jails because of his outspoken condemnation of the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia. At one point he was reported to be dying from the treatment he had received at the hands of his jailers.

But in December, Pachman and his wife were given exit visas. They immediately left for West Germany but were held up at the border by the Czech guards. Only after threatening a hunger strike was he finally allowed to leave his homeland. He has settled in West Germany where he will continue to play and write about chess.

Before moving back into top class international cmpetition, Pachman wants to play in some less exacting tournaments. His first step in this direction was the Evening Standard Chess Congress in London, the largest-ever adult chess tournament in the world. There, playing in the top section of this 1,208-player congress, Pachman scored only four points from six games, losing one and drawing two. Here is his loss against the current British Champion, Brian Eley.

U.S. Withdrawal Thins Activists' Ranks

WASHINGTON (AP) — With American withdrawal from Vietnam, the ranks of the activist peace movement have thinned and the telephones that once summoned legions of protestters aren't answering any more.

Some of the most fervent anti-war leaders are trying to rally supporters for a campaign against the defence establishment itself. But the money and manpower that once fuelled the movement are hard to come by these days.

"People are having difficulty readjusting their emotions," says Sanford Gottlieb, executive director of the Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy. "The war gave the movement a tremendous emotional factor. But people just won't march when you're talking about something like cutting military spending."

A few, particularly the older organizations like SANE and the Quaker-based American Friends Service Committee, appear to be making the shift in targets without a drastic reduction of their rolls. But just as the military buildup in Indochina spawned dozens of other, more militant groups, so has the withdrawal of U.S. forces left them in disarray.

Hardest hit have been those whose tactics lay almost exclusively in the streets. For them, the transition from marches and sit-ins over an actual war to more subdued expressions over the potential of war has been no easy matter. Many have simply disappeared.

A telephone check, for example, of the once-active Washington offices of the Peoples Coalition for Peace and Justice, the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, the Youth International Party, the Vietnam Moratorium Committee, the Women's Strike for Peace, and the New Mobilization Committee to End the War all drew blanks.

The phenomenon has been viewed with no little despair by pacifist leaders, who argue that this is no time to quit. Vietnam, they say, was not the disease but merely a symptom of cold-war politics.

Still, they concede there is no way to recoup the emotional spark that took the peace movement from the fringes of the American political stage to a place in the spotlight.

"The immediate focus is gone," says William Sloan Coffin, the Yale chaplain once recornized—and prosecuted—as a leading advocate of draft resistance. And while he still sees a need to change "the whole mindscape" of U.S. society, he is himself taking a year's vacation.

Dr. Benjamin Spock, the baby doctor and once-cautious liberal who said he was "radicalized" by the war, is another who has slackened his pace—and his tactics. A familiar figure at Washington demonstrations, Spock now finds himself at the helm of his sailboat instead of a phalanx of Pentagon protestors. But he still speaks on behalf of his withered People's Party campaign to build a movement "that's not only independent of Democrats and Republicans, but independent of industry."

"I've become socialist in the sense of believing that we're constantly interfering in the affairs of other nations because of the determination of our defence department and our industry to dominate the rest of the world," says Spock. But he doesn't expect to live to see the change he advocates.

Whatever their strategy, most antiwar organizers agree that the era of the mass marches, the flag-burnings anfsit-ins is finished.

Jerry Gordon, the softspoken co-ordinator of the now-skeletal National Peace Action Coalition, has been the master planner of dozens of Washington demonstrations. Heartened by a turnout of perhaps 50,000 protesters at President Nixon's inauguration, he is among the last of the tactic's holdouts.

But while the former Cleveland attorney fights to maintain his mailing lists, his wife has had to take a "straight" job to pay the bills and he admits that his talents likely wouldn't become manifest without "another blowup."

Gottlieb sees over-all gains.

"The peace movement is now institutionalized," he said. "While the media focused on misdless young people waving Viet Cong flags, some of the biggest churches and labor unions began to work for peace. That's been going on for five years and nobody has noticed."

Museum Records Tax Horrors

By ANTHONY COLLINGS

SIEGBURG (AP) — An unusual West German museum traces the horrors history had in store for the man caught cheating on his taxes—from eyeballs gouged out in ancient Egypt to a hand chopped off in medieval Germany.

The Siegburg Tax Museum also boasts a rare collection of tax forms, including the world's oldest, from 3200 B.C.

The museum is in an 11th century Benedictine monatery on a hill in Siegburg, across the Rhine River from Bonn. It offers graphic evidence that the Pharaohs in ancient Egypt dealt harshly with tax cheaters.

A bas-relief from the tomb of a 2600 B.C. tax collector shows the Pharaoh's agents beating an Egyptian, one stroke for every day his taxes were in arrears.

For more serious offences, the cheating taxpayer had his nose cut off, then his ears.

The worst offenders lost their eyes.

Citizens who didn't prostrate themselves before the collector as a representative of the sacred pharaoh were beaten to the ground.

In 17th-century Germany, taxes were paid on the honor system. A painting shows medieval Germans assembling in a town square, right hands raised to swear they would put the correct amount in the box.

If they didn't—and the tax man caught them—the right hand was chopped off.

The museum's proudest possession is the world's oldest known tax form. Dr. Alfons Pausch, museum director, displayed the clay tablet from 4,500 years ago.

Its cuneiform impressions show that a rich farmer from Uruk, in what is now Iraq, paid 10 per cent of his harvest in the form of cows, fish and grain.

Bargaining Studied

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (Reuter) — President Nixon created a national commission for industrial peace Wednesday to improve the collective bargaining process between management and labor. The group will explore ways to reconcile labor-management differences, and means by which the government can help in negotiations.

Schools Festival

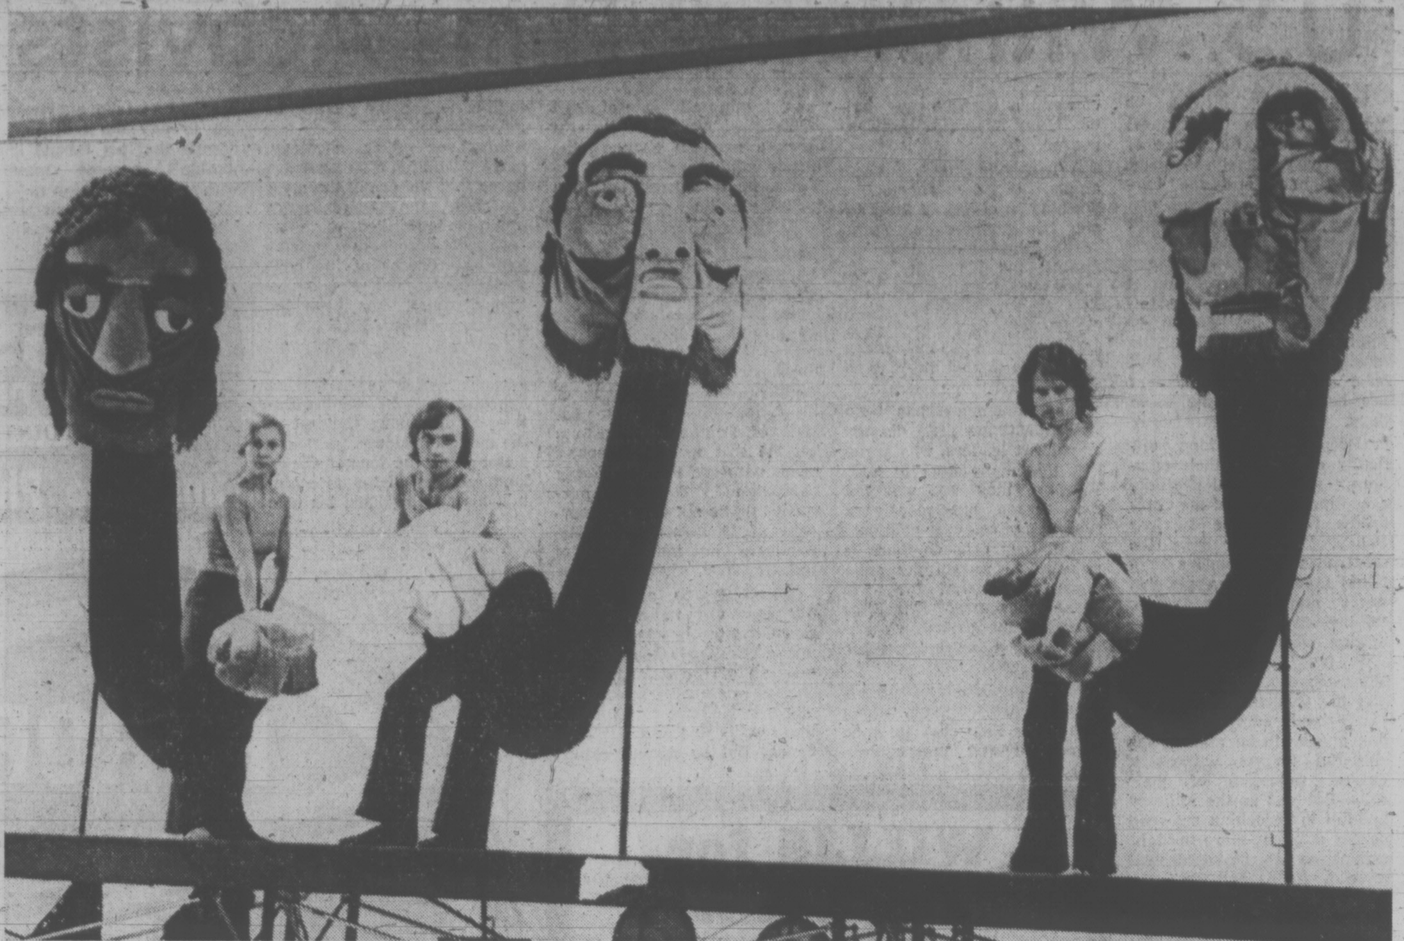
A district-wide Festival of the arts will be staged by Saanich School District (63), beginning Tuesday at Brentwood Elementary School.

This is the second such festival and it has been expanded this year into two sections.

The Brentwood section will continue through Thursday and will feature art displays, drama clubs and music groups from Saanichton, Durrance, Mount Newton Junior, Beaver Lake-Prospect Lake, Royal Oak, North Saanich Junior and Sansbury-McTavish schools.

Second section will be held at Claremont Senior Secondary, April 16 and 17. Art displays and choirs and bands under direction of D. Kyle, T. Ellwood, A. Scott and P. Stiggings will beincluded.

Starting times for events will be 7:30 p.m. and 50-cent tickets can be obtained from any Saanich District school.



GIANT EMBROIDERED puppet heads, the work of widely known Victoria artist Carol Sabiston, are a feature of Company One's presentation, Old Tomorrow: A Saga of the CPR, which will be performed Friday and Saturday in the Crystal Ballroom of the Empress Hotel. They represent "the parliamentary opposition" (from left, Huntington, Blake and MacKenzie) with puppeteers Jacqueline Sears, Bill Murdoch and Murray Ord.

Messiah Soloists

Two members of the Canadian Opera Company, who have toured extensively with that group, will be among four soloists to appear in Victoria Symphony's Easter season presentation of Handel's Messiah.

Mezzo soprano Kathleen Ruddell, a graduate of the University of Toronto Faculty of Music, and tenor John Arab have both sung principal roles here during visits of the Canadian Opera.

They are, incidentally, now husband and wife.

The other two soloists are Nona Mari, soprano, a radio and TV artist for CBC. She is a graduate of the RCT and the Vancouver Opera Training Program and has sung with a number of orchestras both in Canada and the United States.

Donald Cant, baritone, has sung with the Vancouver Opera, Chamber Choir and Bach Choir. He has also completed six solo recitals for educational television.

The Messiah, which will be conducted by Laszlo Gati and will combine the symphony with the Victoria Choral Society (which has been prepared by its director, Rodney Webster), is the final event of the formal season for Victoria Symphony.

Tickets are now on sale at the Symphony box office, 748 Johnson Street.

There's No Substitute for Festival

audrey johnson

There are always strong divisions of feeling about competitive music festivals.

The argument for and against has waxed and waned over many years. But festivals continue to thrive, so it is reasonable to assume the total effect cannot be as harmful as some people assert.

A few years ago Canada Council announced a decision against continuing its modicum of support to the Federation of Canadian Festivals.

Protests were launched and the reply was that the authorities who advise Council in these matters had turned thumbs down on music festivals as being out of date and of no value.

The judgment was faulty, because a festival is antiquated only if it is allowed to be.

As to value, this is positive, if not from the academic, quite definitely from the practical performer point of view.

Clive Lythgoe, a concert pianist who is adjudicating senior classes at Victoria Music Festival this week, defines the value of a music festival this way:

"Where the festival is useful particularly is that it supplies that essentially different set of circumstances between playing in the studio or at home, and playing in an auditorium before a critical but sympathetic audience."

Lythgoe points out that there is a dearth of opportunities for young pianists to do concert work, yet the experience is essential in learning to control nerves.

There is also the rare and useful opportunity of listening to one another in concert surroundings.

The antiquated concept of a music festival as a trophy game, with avid competition that inevitably generates hard feelings, has been kept alive in Winnipeg and in one or two other places but has never been a part of the post-World War II Victoria festival.

Most of the adjudicators find the tone and trend of this festival excellent and even exhilarating.

There has been a watchful and constant de-emphasis of the competitive factor. Nearly all awards are in the form of bursaries and scholarships and a number are given, not simply to winners in terms of marks, but to a performer "who, in the opinion of the adjudicator, shows special promise," to quote from the awards section of the program.

An argument one often hears from the anti-festival person is that students are induced to concentrate for months, to the exclusion of other work, on preparing festival pieces.

I think the answer to that is that festivals are not right for everyone.

They are certainly not right in many instances, for the person who is a slow study and must spend an inordinate amount of time preparing for public performance.

Some kinds of temperamens are not suited to the challenge of festival classes, just as there are many able students in a variety of disciplines whose temperaments make the examination room a disaster area.

The Victoria Festival has grown this year into the biggest since it was revived and reconstituted in 1949.

What happens if it continues to grow from the approximate 1,400 entries in 1973 to say, 2,000 in 1976. There is no agreeable way in which entries can be limited so it can only mean more of everything — adjudicators, halls, staff.

Can the festival continue to be operated on the purely voluntary basis it is at present? We will be lucky if people can be found as dedicated and self-sacrificing of time and energy as those who presently administer the festival during its two-week span.

Will there be a time when marks can be done away with altogether?

Doubtful. Ratings, whether numerical or alphabetical, seem to be necessary and the end result is much the same.

A system introduced this year, giving certificates of merit instead of marks in open classes, pleases Lythgoe very much. It does away with the arbitrary and foolish necessity of differentiating between excellent performances of different selections by one or two marks, he points out.

Lythgoe and his fellow adjudicators, as well as adjudicators of several previous years, like what they have found here.

The debate will go on indefinitely because it's natural that it should, but the festival movement in Canada is at least as strong as ever — in many places, stronger — and that is a fact which cannot be shrugged off by any argument.

SOME CHANGES MADE AT HEALTH CLUB

NEW YORK (AP) — Her first year's contract with Tower Health Club gave her access to a swimming pool, gymnasium and separate showers and saunas for each sex.

So Adele Ellis, a television network employee in need of exercise, signed for another year for $220.

After a six-week absence from the club on Manhattan's West Side, she went to the women's sauna and found therein a nude man.

Miss Ellis retreated to the women's shower, and again found a nude man.

In October, police arrested 14 women and two men, charging them with prostitution. The cases were dismissed.

Thursday, Judge Irving Younger ordered the club to refund Miss Ellis' money and wrote in his opinion:

"Implicit in defendants' promise was the further promise that a health club it would be, not a bordello, not a dance hall and not, as it became, a massage parlor.

"When the defendants changed the nature of the enterprise, they breached their implied promise to plaintiff."

CONCERT SUNDAY

Newcomb Choir will give a concert of sacred music at a Passion Sunday choral Sunday at 7:30 p.m. at Gordon Head Parish Church.

Caroline Stephenson and Dr. Anthony Jenkins will read the passion narrative from St. Mark and the congregation will join in the singing of traditional Passion Sunday hymns.

Songwriter Dies at 76

NEW YORK (AP) — Songwriter, Chester Conn, 76, whose popular works included Night Lights and Forgive My Heart, died this week of a heart ailment.

A family spokesman said Conn was stricken while attending Aqueduct race track.

A native of San Francisco, Conn founded the song publishing firm of Bregman, Vocco and Conn in 1938, publishing the songs of Johnny Mercer and Steve Allen.

'Music Must Be Like the Plants'

By DONALD HENAHAN

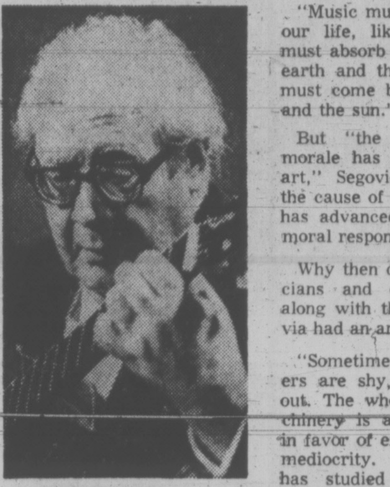
NEW YORK — Andres Segovia is just an ordinary man in the Henry Higgins sense, so why shouldn't he show an ordinary man's pride in what he has wrought? The grandee of the classic guitar — whose Philharmonic Hall recital last month, the first of two there this season, coincided with his 80th birthday — all but twangs and vibrates with pleasure these days at mention of his son, Carlos Andres, a musically gifted young fellow.

"Oh, yes, he is gifted," the Spanish guitarist said emphatically. Carlos Andres is now 2½ years old, but that is not too soon for talent to be discerned by an alert father. Discussing the phenomenon with a visitor in his hotel suite, Segovia would not go so far as to predict that his child would choose a musical career, let alone his father's instrument. But he certainly would not try to prevent it.



SEGOVIA

"If he wants to be a musician, I will respect his vocation," Segovia said. "When I was young I wanted to play the guitar, but I was told by my family that it was not respectable and that it had no present and no future. My father broke two or three guitars to keep me from practising."

Eleven years ago, after divorcing his first wife, Segovia married Amelia Corral Sancho, one of his students, who was then 22. They recently built a house in southern Spain, between Malaga and Granada, on top of a hill. It was in Granada in 1909 that he made his formal debut, or as he puts it, "It was in Granada that I opened my eyes to beauty."

Segovia, who, unlike Pablo Casals and other enemies of the Franco regime, has continued to live in Spain, does not like to discuss politics. But in art he is not reluctant to be known as a stubborn conservative.

"I have seen many changes in music, changes parallelled in the other arts," he said. "Now they make sounds — ooh, eep, ahh — and that is music."

His face crinkled in disdain: "I don't think that art has to grow. But Romanticism, Impressionism, and so on, were steps taking place inside the music, not outside it."

Waving his astonishingly large and pudgy hands to illustrate, the guitarist went on:

"Music must be exactly like our life, like the plants. It must absorb warmth from the earth and the sun. Always it must come back to the earth and the sun."

But "the going down of morale has led to tumult in art," Segovia said. "War is the cause of it all. Technology has advanced, but it has left moral responsibility behind."

Why then do so many musicians and other artists go along with this tumult? Segovia had an answer to that:

"Sometimes good composers are shy, afraid to speak out. The whole publicity machinery is against them and in favor of extravagances and mediocrity. Every musician has studied his instrument, has dreamed at one time of being a famous artist. Why then do they accept the kind of horror they are obliged to play? And the conductors? And the museums? It is a kind of moral cowardice. All that is very sad."

But there is hope. "Little by little the minority of mediocrities is losing influence. The truth in art is beginning to win, I think."

Like a surprisingly large number of renowned musicians of his generation, Segovia has continued performing with immense vitality into what ordinary men consider old age. How does he explain such phenomena as Segovia, Casals, Stokowski, Toscanini, Rubinstein and Monteaux?

The father of the modern guitar and of Carlos Andres Segovia smiled and gave a vague, but poetically plausible answer: "We absorb the energy from the earth."

SCHOOL CHORISTERS have their turn in Victoria Music Festival spotlight next week. Choir classes begin Tuesday and Macaulay School's Grade 2, first on stage at 9:15 a.m. at Victoria Senior Secondary, is ready, willing and eager. The second festival week begins with strings at Oak Bay Junior, Highland dance classes at Newcombe Auditorium, followed by accordion and guitar.

COMING UP NEXT WEEK

"FLAWLESS FINGERS" of Canadian pianist Mari-Elizabeth Morgan captivated a New York Times critic following her recent recital at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. The gifted artists appears in recital at McPherson Playhouse, Sunday at 2:30 p.m., playing a program of Bach (English Suite in A minor and Italian Concerto), Beethoven Sonata Op. 78 in F-sharp, Prokofiev and Chopin. Since she played at the Royal with Victoria Symphony in 1970, Miss Morgan has married one half of a Boston duo-piano team.

Two piano recitals are scheduled Sunday afternoon. Mari-Elizabeth Morgan will perform a program of Bach, Beethoven and Chopin at McPherson Playhouse at 2:30.

At Newcombe Auditorium, Sylvia Lepmanis and the Newcombe Glee Club will present a concert, the pianist to perform works of Debussy, Chopin, Liszt and De Falla.

Victoria Music Festival sessions resume Monday with strings orchestras, school choirs, Highland dance, accordion and guitar events at Newcombe, Oak Bay and Central Junior and Victoria Senior Secondary auditoriums, day and evening.

Folk Dance honor performance program takes place Tuesday, 8 p.m., at Central Junior.

Friday, the Schools Honor Performance winds up the second week's Music Festival competitions at Central Junior, 8 p.m.

Friday and Saturday, Company One presents Old Tomorrow, Empress Hotel ballroom, 8 p.m.

Wind-up of the Music Festival is the Highlights Concert at which top-rated performances are heard. This will take place Saturday at 8 p.m. at McPherson Playhouse. Tickets are now on sale at the box office.

Sound of Music Coming

One of the unexpected pleasures of the Victoria Music Festival this week, was the appearance of the Co-Val Choristers in a musical comedy ensemble class.

Their presentation of numbers from The Sound of Music, given dramatically and in costume, delighted everyone present.

But that was a mere foretaste.

On April 27, Co-Val Choristers will bring their full production of Sound of Music to McPherson Playhouse for one performance.

Directed by Beryl Regier, the production will be accompanied by a 15-piece orchestra consisting of members of the Comox Valley District Concert Band and the Corelli Strings under direction of Peter Ward.

There is a chorus of 50 voices.

The musical will be running for six nights at the new Courtenay Civic Theatre, which is the recently renovated Bickle Theatre.

Stephen the Mad . . . . . . Rides Down Sir Alan

KNIGHTS ALIVE . . . IN SURREY!

VANCOUVER (CP)—The Knights of the Round Table are alive and jousting at their own private Camelot in suburban Surrey.

Actually, the knights are members of the Canadian Jousting Association, which is the creation of Terry Davis, a tough-as-nails Irishman with a fondness for damsels, dragons and those fabled days of yore.

Mr. Davis fights under the name of Sir Terence Bunratty during the association's weekend jousting tournaments, staged at a 17-acre farm in Surrey. He is the association's Grand Knight Marshal.

The association has a "court" of approximately 50 knights, squires, ladies, wenches, pages and lackeys, and all of them are authentically costumed and equipped.

"We don't want any Mickey Mouse costumes or weapons — we want the real thing," quoth Sir Terence, who noted that the well-dressed knight replete with chain mail, steed and wooden lance runs a mean $700.

And the fights are for real—to a point. Various knights are unhorsed by the point of a lance, there are sword battles and the titled gentlemen are frequently bruised and bashed. But no one ever gets killed, which helps, because there just aren't that many chain-mail-equipped knights around to fill any vacancies at the round table.

Sir Terence says he has been a medieval freak ever since he went overseas in 1939 for Second World War service. Nowadays he owns an entertainment production company that specializes in medieval shows, Hawaiian shows, western shows, you name it. . ."

"It has really got to me, I'm obsessed with medieval customs because we are rushing on so fast — and rushing to what? We need to slow down. Things were so much simpler in those days — but more exciting too."

Of late, the knights have been hard at work training for a "Medieval Tournament of Sports" to be held June 1-3 with proceeds going to the B.C. Federation of Sports.

HOW TO WRITE A GOOD CLASSIFIED ACTION AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room, etc, for rent, or property for sale; start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably when given complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—WANT ADS THAT FAIL TO bring the desired results do so usually, not through a lack of readership, but because they are poorly worded or contain inadequate information.

8—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient ad-visor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. for you daily, Monday through Saturday call.

Lloyd Blasts Century

GEORGETOWN, Guyana (Reuter) — A record-equalling partnership between Clive Lloyd, 139 not out, and skipper Rohan Kanhai, 53 not out, pulled the West Indies back from the brink of disaster on the opening day of the fourth test against Australia here Friday.

When stumps were drawn, the West Indies had recovered from 90 for 3 to 269 for 3, with the unbroken Kanhai-Lloyd partnership equalling the record 179 by Clyde Walcott and Gary Sobers against the Australians in 1955.

Lloyd slammed his fourth test century with 14 fours and a six, five days after scoring a hurricane 124 against the Australians in the Guyana match.

Lloyd hammered Australia's seven-man bowling attack at will during his 241 minutes at the crease, driving, sweeping and hooking with confidence and power.

Health Centres Under Way

Dr. Richard Foulkes, director of the provincial health security study, says a start has been made toward setting up experimental health centres in British Columbia.

He told 150 delegates to a joint meeting of the lower mainland and Fraser Valley area councils of the B.C. Hospitals Association that a co-ordinator, working party and civil servants have been selected for the health centres or clinics.

He said if the cabinet gives its approval, the working party will go into selected areas to discuss major health-care problems "and see if they can be solved with a community health centre approach." He declined to say which areas are being considered.

Foulkes said the clinics would be manned by a "team of professionals," and that doctors would be paid by salary "or some means other than on a fee-for-service basis."

U.S. Funded Vote to Beat Allende in '64

By LAURENCE STERN

WASHINGTON (WP) — Massive intervention by the Central Intelligence Agency and state department helped to defeat Salvador Allende in the 1964 election for president of Chile, according to knowledgeable official sources.

U.S. corporate and governmental involvement against Allende's successful candidacy in 1970 has been the controversial focus of a Senate foreign relations subcommittee investigation into the activities of U.S. multinational companies abroad.

But the previously undisclosed scale of U.S. support for Christian Democrat Eduardo Frei against Allende six years earlier makes the events of 1970 seem "like a tea party," according to one former intelligence official deeply involved in the 1964 effort.

The story of the American campaign, early in the Johnson administration, to prevent the first Marxist government from coming to power in the western hemisphere by constitutional means was pieced together from the accounts of officials who participated in the actions and policies of that period.

Cold war theology lingered, and the shock of Fidel Castro's seizure of power in Cuba was still reverberating in Washington. "No more Fidels" was the guidepost of U.S. foreign policy in Latin America under the Alliance for Progress. Washington's romantic zest for political engagement in the third world had not yet been dimmed by the inconclusive agonies of the Vietnam war.

"U.S. government intervention in Chile in 1964 was blatant and almost obscene," said one strategically placed intelligence officer at the time. "We were shipping people off right and left, mainly state department but also CIA with all sorts of covers."

One of the key figures in the 1964 intervention was Cord Meyer Jr., the redoubtable cold war liberal. He directed the CIA's covert programs to neutralize Communist infuence in important opinion-moulding sectors such as trade unions, farmer and peasant oranizations, student activities and communication media.

At least one conduit for CIA money, the International Development Foundation, was employed in the 1964 campaign to subsidize Chilean peasant organizations, according to a former official who was responsible for monitoring assistance to Chile from the Agency for International Development.

One former member of the IDF board, who quit when he discovered it was financed by the CIA, said: "Some of us had suspected for a long time that the foundation was subsidized by the agency. Then it finally surfaced, and it was impossible to continue serving on it. Nonetheless, what they were doing was consonant with President Kennedy's policies in the alliance—political development."

The foundation is still in existence although its CIA funding was terminated. It now is financed by AID appropriations.

Covert financing was arranged for a newspaper friendly to the political interests of Christian Democrat Frei. "The layout was magnificent. The photographs were superb. It was a Madison Avenue product far above the standard of Chilean publications," recalled another state department veteran of the campaign.

One former high-ranking diplomat said CIA operations at the time were bypassing the ambassador's office, despite the 1962 Kennedy letter issued by the late president after the Bay of Pigs debacle. The letter designated ambassádors as the primary authority for all U.S operations within their countries.

"I remember discovering one operation within my last week of service in Chile that I didn't know about. The boys in the back room told me it was "deep cover" and I told them: 'You guys were supposed to tell me everything'," the former diplomat reminisced.

As the 1964 election campaign unfolded in Chile, the American intelligence and diplomatic establishments were divided from within over whether to support Frei or a more conservative candidate, Senator Julio Duran.

CIA's traditional line organization, centred in the western hemisphere division and working through the traditional station chief structure, savored Duran initally. So did then-ambassador Charles Cole and bulk of top state department opinion. The remaining Kennedy administration policymakers, on the other hand leaned toward Frei and the "Democratic / left" coalition he represented. So, reportedly, did the CIA's Cord Meyer.

"For a while, we were at war among ourselves on the question of who to support," recalled a participant in those events.

Duran dropped from consideration when he lost an important byelection to the Communists, and gradually the entire thrust of U.S. support went to Frei.

"The state department maintained a facade of neutrality and proclaimed it from time to time," according to one source who played an important Washington role in inter-America policy at the time of the election.

"Individual officers — an economic counsellor or a political counsellor — would look for opportunities. And where it was a question of passing money, forming a newspaper or community development program, the operational people would do the work.

"AID found itself suddenly overstaffed, looking around for peasant groups or projects for slum dwellers," he recalled. "Once you established a policy of building support among peasant groups, government workers and trade unions the strategies fell into place."

A former U.S. ambassador to Chile has privately estimated that the far-flung covert program in Frei's behalf cost about $20 million. In contrast, the figure that emerged in Senate hearings as the amount ITT was willing to spend in 1970 to defeat Allende was $1 million.

The number of "special personnel" dispatched at various stages of the campaign to Chile from Washington and other posts was calculated by one key Latin American policy maker at the time as being in the range of 100.

AID funds alone were substantially increased for the year of the crucial Chilean election. The first program millin general economic development grant, was approved to buoy the Chilean economy as the election approached. "We did not want to have a condition of vast unemployment as Chile was going into the election," recalled the former AID official.

In addition to U.S governmental assistance, Christian Democratic money was being funnelled into Chile in Frei's behalf by the German and Italian Christian Democratic parties. Among the imprtant channels were the German Bishops Fund and the Adenauer Foundation which were managed by a Belgian Jesuit priest, Roger Vekemans, who has long been a controversial figure in Chile and other Latin American countries. Knowledgeable Americans believe that the European funds had no connection with the CIA programs. But Vekemans was a natural target of criticism by Frei's opponents in the superheated atmosphere of the time.

Mafia Flags Quebec Cabs

QUEBEC (CP) — Underworld elements, probably including the Mafia, have infiltrated Quebec's taxi industry and are using false drivers' permits to facilitate illegal immigration, Transport Minister Bernard Pinard said Thursday.

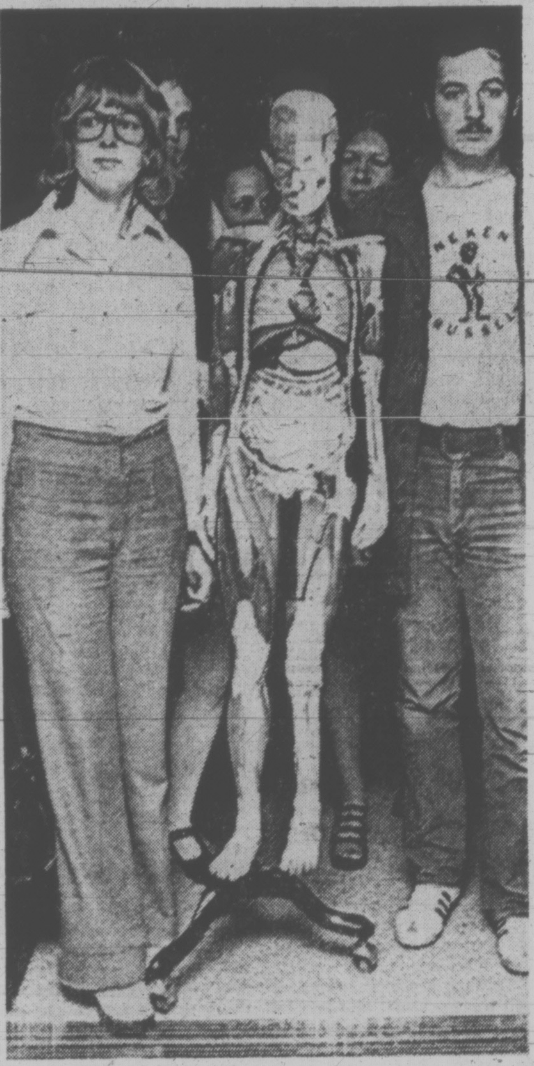
Mr. Pinard told the Quebec national assembly's transport committee that a "vast offensive," stretching into Ontario, has been launched against the underworld elements.

He said the situation came to light in testimony before the committee earlier this year by cab drivers who told of "shameless exploitation" in the industry and of "rackets" in taxi permits and drivers' pocket numbers.

Mr. Pinard said false drivers' permits and pocket numbers were being used "to facilitate the passage of immigrants" into other provinces and into the United States.

He said he had exchanged "very close correspondence" with Gordon Carton, Ontario's transport minister, who had "described certain irregular activities going on in his province at the level of certain persons who were entering Ontario territory in possession of false driving permits."

"We're going to carry out an over-all offensive and we're going to clean up the taxi industry in Montreal and anywhere else in the province where this situation exists," Mr. Pinard said.



GOING UP? Well, George is. He's a visual aid for anatomy and physiology classes at the British Columbia Institute of Technology in Burnaby, and students are used to seeing him being taken along the halls and up the elevator from one class to another.

THE SPY WHO GOT AWAY

CALGARY (CP) — A bizarre case of industrial spying, in which a man was caught photographing documents but allowed to disappear, was reported by police today.

They said a janitor at Geophysical Services Inc. found an office door ajar one evening, peered in and saw a man taking pictures.

The janitor did not recognize the man but all he did was ask the photographer to turn out the lights when he was finished.

The man obliged; the lights were out and the door locked when the janitor rechecked later.

Police said the company did not find out about the incident until five days later during a discussion of security arrangements.

BOB METCALF

Be sure to get some good slides, prints and/or movies of you, your family and friends this Easter.
To photograph the traditional Sunrise Services of worship, select a higher vantage point, put your camera on your tripod, have it all set for exposure and focus, then take your pictures to capture the theme of the service.
Later be sure to photograph the new Easter clothes trying to get the family together. Don't have them in a straight line, make a group and move in close.
Don't forget to capture some of the action at the Easter Egg hunts and the expression of success when the little one finds an egg and get the chocolate covered face afterwards.

Doing The Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

A delightful dress shop in Sidney . . .

You couldn't really call it serendipity when we drove out to Sidney last week and "discovered" that jewel of a dress shop named "The Holly Tree" . . . because we knew beforehand exactly what we were looking for . . . But finding and visiting this truly delightful shop certainly made our day! . . . It's a real pleasure to walk in to . . . Walls colorful with paintings by local artists (which you can buy on the spot if one of them takes your fancy) . . . A charming lady to greet you . . . And the clothes on display . . . well you simply must see them! . . . Dresses and suits and pantsuits so tastefully chosen . . . of such quality and casual smartness . . . that even a blase shopper like us coveted practically everything in sight! (We actually did walk out with a pantsuit which we simply couldn't resist!) . . . New things just unpacked included a replica of the dress Liza Minelli wore at the Academy Awards . . . only this one in bright orange . . . Some darling seerusucker dresses with jackets . . . A pretty polyester jersey jacket dress with tie neck and knife-pleated skirt . . . A terrific 3-piece pantsuit with long jacket . . . skirt and pants . . . Golf skirts and tailored blouses (a good selection of the popular Ports blouses) which should go a long way towards helping you battle par . . . plus other smart, casual clothes we cannot even begin to tell you about today . . . So make your own discoveries at . . . The Holly Tree, 2354 Beacon Ave., Sidney. 656-5212.

Checks in all sizes and shapes, very often mixed together, are decidedly defined in their bright, young way.

New shirt blouses from Liberty . . .

The spring crop of Liberty lawn blouses to hand at Wilson's . . . and we're happy to report that the prints and colors are as beguiling as ever! . . . Just no way you can ever mistake a Liberty design . . . they're in a class by themselves . . . The new arrivals are mostly small florals . . . dainty as all get-out, poised on either dark or light backgrounds . . . A new design this season . . . and to our mind one of the prettiest in years . . . is an all-over pansy print in colors to blend with just about anything you own . . . The blouses themselves are shirtwaists with long sleeves, convertible necklines and straight bottoms . . . which can be worn either tucked in or over your pants and skirts . . . All of these meticulously tailored by Hathaway . . . Also by Hathaway are the new Viyellas . . . in browns and gold, and shades of blue, plaid . . . and black and white checks . . . These have shirt tails . . . as do the crisp-looking shirts of twill-textured cotton with rounded collars . . . striped in red, yellow or blue on white . . . More smart shirt blouses are a drip-dry blend of cotton and polyester . . . black, navy or red and white . . . covered with squares and polka dots from pinhead to dollar sizes . . . Polyester overblouses with long sleeves, tie necks . . . sprinkled with polka dots in various colors . . . have a nice, spring-like look . . . All newly-arrived at W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

The new plaids are muted and soft, with no relationship to the bright solids and checks.

Step out in Florsheims this spring . . .

One of the things we like most about Florsheim shoes . . . apart from their smooth fit and wonderful comfort . . . is that they're not "too" of anything! . . . Not too extreme . . . not too expensive . . . But they do follow all the latest fashion trends in fine footwear . . . at Munday's this week we saw their new Florsheim shoes for spring . . . One of the most popular is a graceful pump with medium heel . . . in a 3-toned patchwork effect of bone, brown and taupe . . . Same shoe in red, white and navy . . . or two-toned navy and white . . . A nice dressy sandal type shoe . . . open toe and heel, closed top . . . comes in a very soft matte-finish white cape as well as in navy and black patent . . . While a true sandal with ¼" platform has wide draped straps of soft cape leather . . . One of the big patterns in the U.S. is a shoe with the spectator look . . . tan with a white vamp . . . Lower heeled Florsheims . . . great for stepping out in these lovely spring days . . . include a white or beige punched leather strapped shoe which has a basket-weave look . . . and a similar shoe with T-strap and slightly lower heel, in either white or navy . . . A popular new pattern is a trim pump in black or navy patent or bone calf . . . Just arrived is a smart walking shoe with crepe sole in beige leather with bone vamp and trim . . . Most of these new shoes have matching bags, priced at $32 . . . shoes themselves are tagged at $30 at . . . Munday's, 1203 Douglas St., 383-2211.

According to Time magazine, high platform shoes have reached their peak and are on the way out.

Happy news for graduates and bridesmaids . . .

Knowing Miss Frith's as well as we do . . . we weren't a bit surprised when we popped in on Monday to find their usual nice assortment of clothes and millinery for Easter and springtime . . . and summer coming up . . . But something rather special did catch our eye . . . a new selection of delightful dresses for bridesmaids . . . and, we thought, equally appropriate for sweet girl graduates . . . with price tags all under $40! . . . There seems to be an emphasis on holding down the price line on this sort of dress at Miss Frith's . . . and while, of course, they do have more expensive bridesmaid dresses . . . we'd personally settle for one of these under-$40 numbers any day . . . because it's the effect that counts . . . and every last one of these is well calculated to delight the eye and present a pretty picture on wedding or graduation day! There's a really good selection of colors, styles and sizes . . . The full-sleeved flowered sheers with either scoop or high ruffled necks we thought especially pretty . . . along with the sparkly crystaline sheer dresses with their short puff sleeves and lace trim . . . How these latter can be sold for $35 in this day and age we'll never know! . . . Another delightful style features an eyelet embroidery collar and waistband on polyester crepe . . . A fortrel crepe with scoop neck has that uncluttered look we approve of . . . Other delightful types too . . . Great way to look like a million for less than $40! . . . Miss Frith Fashions, 1619 Douglas St., 383-7181.

Pearls are very much "in" . . .

Diamonds may be a girl's best friend and we wouldn't dream of knocking them . . . but for sheer flattery, versatility and perfect-with-everything-ness . . . we'll take pearls! . . . So it's nice to know that pearls are making a real comeback in the jewellery fashion picture . . . Mr. de Goutiere pointed out to us when we visited his shop on Tuesday . . . He has a beautiful selection of cultured pearl necklaces . . . strands or all lengths and sizes . . . both uniform and graduated . . . ranging in price from $40 to $600 . . . Two- and three-strand pearl bracelets too, tagged at $100 and $175 . . . Pearl earrings, either drop or stud . . . As for rings, we saw a lovely baroque pearl set in 14k gold for just $63.25 . . . We also saw some new one-of-a-kind pendants and chains which we thought very unusual . . . One made from a free-form piece of pink tourmaline with a little garnet set in the bottom, mounted on a gold frame . . . $275 . . . and another contemporary design in 18k gold set with yellow and amber citrine . . . $285 . . . A new ring we hadn't seen before is lovely . . . a wide gold band with three oval garnets and six little diamonds . . . And speaking of diamonds . . . they're the birthstone for April, which means they bring luck to the April birthday girl in more ways than one! . . . You'll find a very good selection of fine quality diamond rings, earrings and estate diamonds at . . . de Goutiere Jeweller Ltd., 2524 Estevan Ave., 592-3224.

Bone or beige shoes are naturals with pastel dresses and separates.

"People are talking about . . ."

Yes, to plagiarize the heading for a feature in Vogue . . . People are talking about . . . Peter Church and his Oak Bay Design Studio . . . About the former for his artistry in interior designing of rooms . . . or re-doing of whole houses or apartments . . . and the latter because it's a Mecca for people in search of really out-of-the ordinary drapery and upholstery fabrics, fixtures and picture framing and furniture and wallpapers which you couldn't come by short of a personal visit to some sophisticated metropolitan centre . . . and maybe even then some! . . . Right now people are raving about a lot of gorgeous new imported fabrics whose like you'll find nowhere else in town . . . Crisp French silks in an amazing variety of colors . . . Velvets in a range of colors to knock your eye out . . . Exciting designs in drapery fabrics . . . The most beautiful white embroidered panels we've ever seen for glass curtains . . . We drooled over a stunning, very heavy drapery or bedspread fabric with its design of flowers and macaws . . . There are literally thousands of samples in every fabric you can think of . . . Some of the designs are tremendously subtle . . . We noticed a lot of elegant Chinese motifs, among others . . . If you want something a little out of the ordinary . . . something you won't find in any store . . . and that will not be duplicated in any other Victoria home . . . pay an early visit to . . . Oak Bay Design Studio, 2295 Oak Bay Ave., 592-9322.

French Eat Mules

PARIS (AP) — "Special Today — Mule Steak" said the sign on the window of Charles Fougeat's butcher shop in Montmarte.

"It's a real delicacy," said Fougeat, holding up a bright red cut. "You've never tasted such tender meat. Unfortunately, mules are getting rarer and we don't have enough of it."

Women of all ages came in off the Rue Riquet to pay $2.86 a pound for Fougeat's mule steak, only a few cents less than beef. But Fougeat doesn't sell beef. His spotless, white-tiled store is a "boucherie chevaline," one of the French capital's 1,600 retailers of horsemeat.

Since the middle of the 19th century, the French have been the world's largest consumers of horsemeat. It was known as "poor man's beef" then and cost a tenth what beef did. The story goes that Napoleon's soldiers discovered the nutritional value of their own transportation during the retreat from Moscow.

As tractors displaced horses on French farms, the country began importing its horsemeat and the price went up.

"People now eat horsemeat because they like it and because they think it's healthy, not because it's cheaper," said Fougeat.

The French are no more sentimental about horses than North Americans are about steers.

"I like to ride horses," said one man, "but I see nothing wrong with eating them when their time is up. It's excellent, tasty meat, and it never gives you tapeworm."

Unsweetened Pineapple Popular New Cooking Product

By MARY MOORE

As you know I often carry on about the price of fruit or filling for pies and have said more than once that pumpkin and lemon pies are the most economical.

Right now I am in love with the canned unsweetened pineapple in its own juice which I can buy for 39c for a 19-ounce tin. So I made a pineapple meringue pie which I think you will welcome and enjoy.

PINEAPPLE MERINGUE

Pastry
1 cup stirred but unsifted cake and pastry flour
½ tsp. salt
⅓ cup shortening
2 tbsp. butter
2 tbsp. cold water

Filling:
⅔ cup sugar (first amount)
¼ cup corn starch
½ tsp. salt
1 19-oz. can unsweetened crushed pineapple (packed in unsweetened pineapple juice)
1 tbsp. lemon juice
¾ cup hot water
3 eggs — yolks and whites separated
⅓ cup sugar (second amount for meringue)
⅛ tsp. cream of tartar

To make Pastry, cut shortening and butter into flour and salt until size of peas. Drizzle in water, tossing with a fork. Pack into ball between palms and roll out on floured board to fit nine inch deep pie plate. Line pie plate and flute edge. Prick shell all over with fork. Bake at 425 deg. Fahr. about 8 minutes — but keep your eye on it and remove from oven when tinged with gold.

To make Filling in a heavy pot combine sugar (first amount), corn starch, salt, pineapple and its juice and lemon juice and when well mixed stir in hot water and cook stirrring until thick and boiling. Mix a little of the hot filling with the egg yolks and then stir back into the filling over low heat for about one or two minutes. Pour into baked pie shell.

To make meringue beat egg whites with sugar (second amount) and cream of tartar until stiff and sugar crystals are all dissolved. Pile attractively on filling and bake at 375 deg. Fahr. until delicate gold — about 12 to 15 minutes.

This pie should be made at least 3 hours before serving time to slice neatly. It is delicious and a lovely change.

dear abby

Harsh Sentence Lauded by Reader

DEAR ABBY: Recently, a 17-year-old Florida boy pleaded guilty to possessing hallucinogenic drugs. He had also been charged with violence toward a Miami Beach police officer.

Judge Alfonso Sepe sentenced the youth to one year in the County Stockade and four years probation. The comments of the judge so impressed me that I ordered the transcript from the court reporter so that I may read it to my own children.

Your column is so widely read I am sending you the "lecture" Judge Sepe gave that boy in the presence of the grieving parents. I hope you will publish it and give it the national forum I think it deserves. —Mrs. A. L. Cates, Miami, Fla.

DEAR MRS. CATES: Rarely do I devote an entire column to one letter, but I agree, this is worth it. Here it is:

Judge Sepe spoke directly to the youth and said, "Do you know who is going to serve that year? Not you; your mother and father will serve that year.

"That is what's wrong. They get sentenced. They get sentenced for a lifetime.

"You serve a year. Your body is in the stockade for a year, but their souls are tormented for a lifetime. Why? Because you are a selfish, spoiled boy, that's why.

"There is no punishment in the world that I could inflict upon you that could in any way compensate for what you are doing to your mother and father. I have not spent five cents raising you. I didn't know you from Adam. But your mother and father have put their lives, their hearts, their sweat, their money and everything else they have into bringing you up. And now they have to sit in this courtroom and listen to a total stranger who had nothing to do with your upbringing scold you and put you in jail.

"This is at a time when phony kids your age are yelling, 'You adults have your alcohol, we want our drugs; you have polluted our water and our air, you have polluted this and that,' and all the rest of the garbage that comes out of your mouths.

"Meanwhile, you put yourselves above everybody else. I feel sorry for you.

"I want you to think of this for one year, and the reason why I say it:

"If you are sick, a doctor will treat you and he won't be on drugs. The lawyer who represents you won't be high on drugs, and the people in whose custody you'll be won't be on drugs.

"Your astronauts are not on drugs, and your president is not, and your legislators are not.

And your engineers who build the bridges that you drive across and the tunnels that you drive through are not on drugs, and those who build the planes that you fly in and the cars that you drive are not.

"Neither are those who build the bathrooms that you stink up with your lousy, rotten drugs.

"None of them have been on drugs, and this is because of people like your mother and father.

"But in the world of the future," Sepe went on, "the same may not be true. Teachers, doctors, lawyers, legislators — products of the new drug-oriented generation—may well be high as kites.

"You won't know whom to send your child to, or whom to trust your life to."

Sepe sighed and closed the case file.

"Let's see what kind of world you leave to your children," he said, "before you talk about the world that we left to ours."

Kids Counter Television 'Lies'

TORONTO (CP) — Eight Toronto youngsters who called television commercials "a jungle of lies" have produced a one-minute color commercial to show the adults how they think it should be done.

It all started when a forum was held at their school in suburban Don Mills last June. The students then called for stronger laws to police quality of products, particularly toys; they wanted fewer commercials; and they suggested the public be given free time to deny exaggerated claims.

Vegetarian Diet Emerges From Realm of Faddists

By ANN DUNSMUIR
Times Staff

Today, with the cost of living rising every month, a vegetarian diet adds up to money in the bank — and full nutrition, too.

A family of two adults, a teenager and a child under 10 years of age can save approximately $79 monthly by becoming vegetarians.

The provincial health department which publishes a monthly list of food costs reports that such a family spent $139 for food in February 1973.

Vegetarian families of two adults and two or three children spend an average of $80 to $100 monthly for food and all other household supplies.

Vegetarian Helen Bell of the Amor de Cosmos Food Co-op says vegetarian members spend an average of $15 a week for a family of four.

Nutrition Risk

Bell says people converting to vegetable diets today have nothing in common with faddists who decide to live on nothing but brown rice and run the risk of poor nutrition.

She says one third of the co-op's members are vegetarians. "They come from all levels of society not just the hippie groups or religious sects."

Bell says one pound of soybeans at 19 cents a pound contains the same proteins as ground beef at 89 cents a pound. Soybeans, in fact, contain all of the eight amino acids (proteins) essential for good health.

Protein Suppiled

Other vegetarian staples each contain some of the essential proteins and need to be eaten in combination. Lentils and brown rice combined, for example, provide all the protein needed for a balanced diet.

Vegetarians may also be healthier as well as wealthier than meat eaters.

Kathleen Piper who has taught a course in vegetarianism at Camosun College believes vegetarians are healthier than carnivores because they avoid impurities present in the animal's body when it is killed.

"Why eat second class food when the best is available," Mrs. Piper asked.

She believes following mankind's original diet of fruits, vegetables and cereals results in better health, a more youthful appearance and longer life.

Medical studies of vegetarians support her theories. However, most vegetarians have other things going for them. Most are non-smokers and non-drinkers and rarely take drugs of any kind.

A study of 466 male Seventh Day Adventists (vegetarian, non-smoking, non-drinking) shows that they had significantly lower cholesterol levels than a matched group of meat eaters.

Cholesterol is formed in the body from animal fats. Too much can clog arteries causing a heart attack.

Another study indicates that male vegetarians suffer their first heart attack 10 years later than the average meat eater.

Lower Rates

Insurance companies in Great Britain charge vegetarians lower rates because of actuarial findings that they live longer than other people.

Mrs. Patricia Penner's experience supports the view that vegetarians are healthier than other people. She says her three children are seldom sick and the family dentist finds their teeth excellent.

She advises people considering vegetarianism to cook vegetables in small amounts of water until they are tender but still a bit crisp.

"Don't peel anything that doesn't need peeling because a lot of important minerals are located just under the skin."

Mrs. Penner says that people who eat a good variety of vegetables are bound to get enough protein in their diet.

She points out that three ounces of lentils provide 25.5 grams of protein compared to 22 grams in the same amount of hamburger.

Mrs. Penner claims vegetarians are healthier than others

A typical dinner at the Penner home would include a lima bean loaf, squash, broccoli, boiled millet, wholewheat bread, orange juice and fruit.

Mrs. Penner never buys cookies, ice cream, candies or white bread. She says people need to eat three slices of white bread compared to one of whole wheat to obtain the necessary supply of vitamin B-6.

As for packaged cereals, she thinks people would be better off if they threw away the contents and ate the box.

Mrs. Penner spends only $30 to $35 a week for groceries and household supplies — including meat for two stubbornly non-vegetarian dogs.

Classic Cookbook's Paperback Rights Sell for Record Price of $1.5 Million

By ERIC PACE

NEW YORK — The highest known sum ever paid for the paperback rights to a single book, $1.5 million, is being spent not for a trendy conjugal manual, not for a steamy historical novel, not for a fat political memoir, but for a cookbook that first came out in 1931: The Joy of Cooking.

New American Library, the paperback house, made the deal recently. Half the money is to go to the hardcover publisher Bobbs-Merrill, and half to Marion Rombauer Becker, the book's surviving co-author. Her family has prospered over the decades along with the entire cookbook trade, which has become a multi-million-dollar industry.

Reached at her home outside Cincinnati, Mrs. Becker, a Vassar alumna and a prominent clubwoman, was asked what she would do with her $750,000 windfall.

"I just don't know," she said, "I really don't. We've been very lucky over the years, and we're not people who are terribly interested in material things."

The other co-author was Mrs. Becker's mother, Irma S. Rombauer, who died in 1962. Mrs. Rombauer was a St. Louis matron who was admired for her culinary skills. She was widowed in 1930 and wrote the first edition of the book, as her daughter put it, "chiefly to distract her keen unhappiness."

A privately printed first edition came out in 1931, and later Mrs. Rombauer became a Bobbs-Merrill author by chance during a visit to Indianapolis. There she played bridge with a well-connected cousin, Mrs. Ina Hollweg Vonnegut, whose nephew, Kurt, is the noted writer.

Present for the bridge game was Lawrence Chambers, the president of Bobbs-Merrill. He leafed through Joy, found it to his taste, and published it in 1936. Since then it has gone through five hard-cover editions and, Bobbs-Merrill reports, sold six million copies.

Mrs. Becker did the testing and illustrations for the 1931 edition. She became a full-fledged co-author in the 1940's and an edition that came out in the 1950's was the first to bear her name as a co-author.

Although the book sold a reported 300,000 copies last year, Bobbs-Merrill decided the time was ripe to sell the paperback rights, and after complex negotiations, N.A.L. and Bobbs-Merrill executives signed a contract at Bobbs-Merrill's austere office here.

Afterward, Eugene Rachlis, Bobbs-Merrill's editor-in-chief said, "We're delighted." The money, an advance payment against royalties, is to be paid in three installments over the next three years.

N.A.L.'s president, Herbert Schnall said, I'm not too jolly about paying $1.5 million for anything, but I'm delighted at the prospect of selling millions of copies, which we expect to do."

Until now, the two highest known prices for the paperback rights to single books were both logged last year in sales to Avon Books, another paperback concern: $1 million for I'm O.K. — You're O.K. by Dr. Thomas Harris, and $1.1 million for Jonathan Livingston Seagull, by Richard Bach.

Even in paperback, cookbooks are very big business. Bantam Books, for instance, reports it has 34 cookbooks in print, including two that have sold more than two million copies: the All-New Fannie Farmer Cookbook and The Art of Italian Cooking by Maria LoPinto.

Three others have reported sales of more than $1 million. They are The Art of Jewish Cooking, by Jennie Grossinger, The Art of French Cooking, by Fernand Garvin, and The French Chef Cookbook, by Julia Child.

Mrs. Rombauer's own initiation into cooking was prosaic. As she once recalled it, "I was brought up to be a 'young lady.'"

"As a family we traveled extensively," she said, "filling our hours with opera-going, gallery visiting and letter writing. All utterly delightful — and useless from a practical standpoint. So my camp-loving husband taught me to cook."

Mrs. Rombauer learned so well and wrote so well that Bobbs-Merrill published Joy with a money-back guarantee. Of the first one and a half-million copies, the story goes, only one was returned by a dissatisfied user.

Informality Curbs Student Direction

MONTREAL (CP) — A new program at Sir George Williams University that frees undergraduates from formal course requirements has left some students uncertain about where they are headed.

Fifteen students were admitted last September to the first year of a three-year "scholar's program" which allows them to tailor their workload to their own needs, under the guidance of an individual tutor.

Ken Cameron, who has worked out a personal program in industrial sociology with the help of a political science teacher, said that as the first academic year winds up, most of the 15 students involved "don't quite know what they want to do."

"Although we're all involved in vastly different areas of study, and there is no tangible reason for our meeting all together, we do get together once in a while and I find that this indecision is there."

"If fluctuates so much that we don't know how it is going to turn out," said Katherine Lippel, 18, who has set up her own African studies program.

The bulk of her work is writing papers, she said. "When in doubt, write a paper — I've done a lot of long ones."

Prof. David Miller, a teacher in the Sir George religious studies department, originated the program "as one more avenue toward a degree."

"The most important point of the program is that there is a one-to-one ratio between the scholar and the adviser.

"The reason Sir George instituted the program was to attract a limited number of bright students who might otherwise be taken in by other univesities.

"We're in a highly competitive market, and one way of attracting students is by providing a program which McGill does not or cannot offer."

The 15 students enrolled in the program were chosen from more than 80 applicants and more than 50 students have applied for next year.

The Honeymoon's Still On

No Matter What Lifestyle Couples Want a Memory

By PENNY SCHWARTZ

NEW YORK — At a time when a growing number of young people live together before marriage, the honeymoon might seem irrelevant. But it isn't, according to those who take it, those who sell it and those who study it.

Couples who have lived together by arrangement as well as those who enter formal marriage inexperienced agree that the need for something as formalized as a honeymoon remains. Only now they define it as a vacation, a chance to get away alone together and, for some, a chance to relax after months of wedding preparations.

Margaret Mead, the anthropologist, views the honeymoon as "a changing institution" that differs greatly from what it was 25 years ago, but said she feels it is needed "either way" — for the legally married couple or for the couple who first live in a counter-marriage arrangement.

"We need it as a time to get used to greater commitment," she explained.

"The standard honeymoon," Mead said, "used to be that, after the wedding party and the throwing of the bouquet, there'd be the throwing of rice and the bride and groom would go off for a honeymoon. It was supposed to be the seclusion of the newly-married couple until they got over the embarrassment of being married.

"Today, we think of the honeymoon as a trip, a kind of thing you're entitled to like a wedding present, but it doesn't have to occur right after the wedding."

Changes are evident to the people who sell honeymoons, too. Jordan Wolf, a travel agent, specializes in honeymoons.

He said couples today spend more money, take more time, travel farther and go on honeymoons whether or not they've lived together beforehand.

Wolf, whose 14-year-old agency, Honeymoon Holidays, books more than 3,000 honeymoons a year, said an increasing number of prospective customers come in, volunteer that they've been living together and, because of their parents or plans for children, plan to make their arrangement legal.

"Then they say they feel they deserve a honeymoon," he observed. Whether virgin newlyweds or experienced couples, "they're all looking for a memorable experience," Wolf said.

Many couples agree. One couple, a doctor and a nurse who had lived together for eight months before their big wedding, said their honeymoon — three weeks in Europe — was an important part of their plans.

"Traditionally, I guess, a honeymoon is supposed to be the first time there's sexual knowledge of each other, with constant lovemaking," the wife said. "But for a couple who have lived together, it's different. There's more communication. You're friends, not strangers."

The former nurse added that she imagined honeymoons could be more difficult for couples who hadn't lived together.

"All of a sudden you're with someone constantly," she said. "You've gone from a dating relationship to constant exposure to each other."

Intense Personality Tied to Heart Ills

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The harsh, grating voice on the tape recorder belonged to one of San Francisco's most successful executives.

It is a sound picture of a man, who when interviewed about his life's details, responded impatiently. He answered some anticipated questions before they were asked and finished sentences in sharp, crisp cadence.

What makes the tape more than an ordinary interview is that the subject, aged 61, died one year later of a heart attack.

The San Francisco research doctor who questioned him has supervised more than 3,000 such interviews and says the potential attack victim could be spotted by his voice, manner and even constrained facial characteristics.

Dr. Meyer Friedman, cardiovascular research director at Mount Zion Hospital here, contends that men with certain personality traits are more prone to heart attacks, even though they may eschew cigarettes and cholesterol-laden foods. He is quick to add, however, that such high-risk men increase their chances of a coronary when they smoke or eat a lot of fatty foods.

Friedman, an energetic 63 and a former coronary victim himself, says there are two types of personalities — Type A, those with high-risk behavior patterns; and Type B, less intense men less likely to have heart trouble.

"Ten per cent of the A group between 35 and 60 will get a heart attack," Friedman said in an interview.

"A men have "free-floating hostility, insecurity, look at everything as a challenge and are addicted to habit formulations," he said.

"The Type-A man makes everything in his life a matter of time urgency."

The Type B man is not rushed or bound by habit to set near-impossible goals for himself.

"A groupers say they're good at something, they intimate it by the projects in which they are involved," Friedman says.

"A B knows very well how good he is and will say so.

"He has a horizon and limits."

Invalid Takes First Flight

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont. (CP) — After waiting 13 months, Bob Venn, 26, took his first training flight as Canada's first wheelchair pilot to use a temporary hand control.

"It was too fantastic to really be happening," said Venn, a local broadcaster. "It was just too good to be true."

A CENTURY APART — Britain's newest hovercraft, which is claimed to be as quiet as a car, passes the brig Unicorn off the coast of England. The prototype hovercraft introduced by Air Vehicles Ltd., of Cowes, is called the AV 2 and is capable of carrying five people of 1,000 pounds. It has good maneuvrability and is capable of a top speed of 35 m.p.h. It is designed for fast transport in shallow waters, swamps, ice, mud or debris laden rivers. The square-rigger, registered in Finland, is privately owned.

Tuna Rotted Before Canned

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Star Kist tuna fish that sickened more than 200 persons before it was recalled was rotten at the time it was canned, a government investigation has determined.

A United States Food and Drug Administration (FDA) investigation shows Star Kist packed the fish in two lots and the fish was so decomposed that a trained inspector would have been able to smell it, an FDA official said.

Asked about the results of the investigation, Thomas Virgil, manager of marketing for Star Kist, said, "we have all kinds of quality control, how that occurred we don't know."

Virgil was not available for later telephone interviews regarding the investigation. Star Kist is a subsidiary of H. J. Heinz Co.

232 POISONINGS

Star Kist recalled nearly 173,000 cans of tuna fish ceded in February after consumers who ate the fish reported it made them sick.

The National Communicable Disease Centre, which keeps track of food-borne illness, counted 232 instances of what it considers confirmed food poisoning due to the Star Kist tuna.

The NCDC said none of the victims required hospital treatment and most reported their sickness lasted a few hours.

The reports forwarded to NCDC listed traditional scrombotoxin reactions of a burning sensation in the mouth, hivelike skin eruptions, cramps and headache.

Cooking during the canning process kills the bacteria but does not destroy the toxin.

Because canned goods are cooked at high temperatures and the cans provide a hermetic seal, other recent recalls of canned goods have involved slipups in the delicate canning process.

But in the Star Kist case "the cans were in good shape," said an FDA inspector involved in the recall. "The fish was rotten before it went in."

What is it?

A revolutionary new cosmetic and skin treatment discovery that combines NATURAL SOURCE PROTEINS in pure gels, to let you care for your skin in Nature's way, quickly, simply and without "GOO".

What does it do?

As your skin matures, it is not capable of reproducing enough moisture for the face and neck areas to offset the constant drying effects of the Canadian climate. Simplicité helps maintain the moisture level dehydrated by the weather and restores the natural softening and healthful oils, but without using heavy grease, or "goo".

How does it work?

Chemical advances let Simplicité combine Natural Source Proteins, emollients, humectants, moisturizing agents, (and some other secrets) in super-thin, thermo-active, high surface-tension, translucent gels. (Sound complicated?) Simply, it means that chemical elements the skin will absorb to clean itself, nourish itself, and help keep its proper moisture/chemistry balance have been formulated in very pure transparent gels. Smoothed onto the face and neck, these elements are taken into the skin's surface in nature's proportion to restore the proper balance of chemical elements and moisture. But the gel is so thin and translucent that after application, you can't see it, and you can't feel it. (No oily residue, no grease, no stickiness, no discolouring cream...no "goo"!)

How do you use it?

START CLEAN with Simplicité Gel Cleanser...Smooth it on with finger tips. Wait one minute. Wipe it off. It makes your skin come clean, and alive, but not "goo-ey".

STAY LOVELY while you treat your skin, with Simplicité Night Cream Gel...Finger tip it on smoothly in a thin application. That's all! It's not oily, not sticky, not tacky. You can't see it, you can't feel it. Yet, all night it will continue to nourish and moisturize your skin.

GET FRESH. Start the day with Simplicité Toning Gel...Finger tip it on, feel it tingle as the nerves call for fresh reserves into the tiny capillaries, re-invigorating and freshening the skin just below the surface.

KEEP YOUR SKIN ALIVE with Simplicité Moisture Gel. Touch it on smoothly with gentle strokes. It will seem to disappear. (Note how smoothly cosmetics apply over it. No smearing or caking.)

SPECIAL BONUS OFFER:
For a limited time only, when you purchase $7.50 or more of Simplicité products, you will receive, a full size Simplicité skincare product plus a Simplicité Lip Colour in the shade of your choice.
This Special Offer expires May 15th, 1973.

AS BEAUTIFUL AS YOU ARE...SIMPLICITÉ COSMETICS will reveal an even lovelier you.

...for lips that speak for themselves and say something about you. New firm formula lipsticks slide colour onto your lips smoothly, evenly. Shine and shimmer for hours longer.

Choose from a glowing array of deep and petal-soft Simplicité colours, that stay moist.

For the eyes...things are looking up! Drop your eyes shy and soft with Simplicité Powder Eye Shadow. Draw a fine line with Simplicité Cake Eyeliner. Make lashes look lush, longer with light-as-a-feather Simplicité Brush-on Mascara.

Put your best face forward. Simplicité Foundation Gel and Pressed Powder smooth out and hide tiny wrinkles and flaws so subtly, you won't believe it. Leave your face with a fresh, translucent sheen.

For cheeks that don't blush as easily as they did once. Simplicité Gel Rouge. A completely new idea for putting the glow back in your cheeks. Your skin takes on a more youthful healthy look that looks entirely natural...(it almost is entirely natural).

Count on your fingers to add the finishing touch. Newly formulated Simplicité Nail Polish flows on in colours to match your lips and stays beautiful far longer, in rich subtle shades to give your fingers the look of elegance.

Talk with your Yardley cosmetician. Ask her about the Simplicité Beauty Club. Have her demonstrate Simplicité skincare and cosmetics. You won't believe your eyes.

NOTTINGHAM, England—Police were astonished when they looked up at their station roof. They saw Terrence Twells, 23, hard at work—stealing lead.

"I did it for bravado," Twells said according to testimony in court Friday. "It was a bit of challenge."

The judge fined Twells $50 for stealing four pounds of the lead roofing.

SAN FRANCISCO—A veteran who fell in love with a Vietnam streetwalker rowed off in a 16-foot rubber raft Friday to keep his promise to return to marry her.

Louizell Haynes, 24, who has never gone to sea before, said his girlfriend Kim promised him she would not go back to the streets if he returned.

He met Kim two years ago while he was stationed with the 173rd airborne brigade near Bongson, 300 miles south of Saigon. But the army would not give him permission to marry her.

"I told her I'd return as a civilian and marry her even if I had to get there on my own power," he said as he prepared to row out through the Golden Gate.

PRINCETON, N.J. — Reminiscing during a luncheon at Princeton University Friday, supreme court justice William O. Douglas described how he once told Nikita Khrushchev it was a pity he had not been born in America.

"Mr. premier, you'd have become the mayor of Chicago," Douglas said he told the late Soviet leader.

LOS ANGELES—Actress Susan Hayward is "responding well to treatment" for an undisclosed illness for which she was hospitalized March 26, a spokesman said today.

He said Miss Hayward was first admitted to Cedars of Lebanon Hospital but transferred to another hospital Friday because a flood of flowers and calls to the switchboard created too much publicity.

The spokesman declined to state the nature of her illness or where she was transferred.

HELPER, Utah — Shirley Haycock thinks people who want to keep her from crossing the Atlantic in a 17-foot canoe are taking all the excitement out of life.

Mrs. Haycock, 40, said Friday they are only increasing her determination to leave this coal mining town in eastern Utah next week for Washington, D.C., where she plans to launch her canoe April 16 for Lisbon, Portugal.

MOSCOW — When V. S. Abramov goes hunting in the Siberian Iaiga he takes along four dogs and a cat.

It's the cat, named Ryzhik (orange), that does most of the work.

"He never leaves his master's side," the newspaper Trud said.

"Neither the dogs nor the blast of the shotguns bothers him. When he sees a fallen bird he rushes into the bush and delivers the trophy to his master."

OTTAWA — Liberal MPs wore red carnations in the Commons Friday to mark Prime Minister Trudeau's fifth anniversary as national party leader.

Sexy Soprano Really Wows 'Em

United Press International

NEW YORK — Carol Neblett, the statuesque soprano who titilated New York opera patrons by bathing nude on stage, is on her way to becoming the thinking man's sex symbol, whether she likes it or not.

Opera glasses steamed and the critics raved over her sensuous portrayal of the evil seductress Poppaea in Monteverdi's O'incornazione de Poppaea at the New York City Opera.

Besides her acclaimed voice, the 27-year-old California native is sexy looking. Slender, full bosomed and blonde, she is five feet, nine inches tall and long legged.

"I think I'm the first to appear really nude on stage, without a bodystocking," she told an interviewer. "There was nothing lewd about it, though. It was kind of artsy, like looking at a Botticelli painting."

(A nude dancer did appear recently in Lincoln Centre's production of the opera Beatrix Cenci).

Since playing Poppaea, Miss Neblett, says she has rejected an offer to appear nude in Playboy. But she accepted an invitation from the New Orleans opera to sing in Thais in April, in which she will again be nude.

Singers, Musicians 'Balanced, Rich'

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

An impressive aggregation of singers and instrumentalists under the firm direction of George Corwin presented the first of two performances of Handel's oratorio, Judas Maccabaeus, at UVic gymnasium Friday.

Less well known than some, it is a magnificently constructed and balanced work, emotionally and texturally rich.

The 350 musicians taking part include a huge chorus and a 34-piece orchestra. Personnel in both instances are a mixture of students, faculty and citizens of Greater Victoria.

Soloists are Erika Kurth, soprano, Elinor Bertram, mezzo soprano, Arthur Wiebe, tenor, and Garth Gislason, bass.

The chorus sound is beautiful with great clarity in the part singing, the tone always smooth and full at all dynamic levels, clear diction and fine precision in attacks and finishes.

From the orchestral point of view there is also a satisfactory competence that is entirely complimentary to the outstanding choral work.

There is on every side, evidence of meticulous preparation by the director, revealing the mind of the musical perfectionist.

In the ultimate artistic effect, the performance is perhaps more in the scholarly vein than the dramatic — Handel's oratorios are all stage dramas under the skin.

One feels somehow that the purity of tone and style is just a little on the cold side of the spectrum.

The whole production is so technically secure that one now feels that the forces could be unleashed to provide more of the heroic and human passions.

Acoustics of the gymnasium tend to rob solo voices of brightness but all four soloists nevertheless make a fine contribution in quality and musicianship.

A particularly supple and lovely effect is achieved by Mrs. Kurth in the aria, From Mighty Kings, her voice blending brilliantly with strings and harpsichord.

The opulence and tessitura of Wiebe's voice is well served throughout, but in Call forth my powers particularly so, while the bass aria, Arm, arm ye brave, reveals Gislason's fine timbre.

The gymnasium was filled to capacity for the performance which will be repeated tonight at 8.

Pianists to Be Featured Tonight at Festival '73

There will be 12 pianists, ranging in age from eight to 20, competing in three championship classes in today's Music Festival session.

The program will take place at Newcombe Auditorium beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Junior, intermediate, senior and open finals will culminate in presentation of the City of Victoria Medallion to the winner of the open class.

The four contenders for the Medallion are Susan de Burgh, James Sheridan from Cheney, Wash., Jackie Parker, Shawnigan Lake School, and Allen Reiser.

Seniors are winners from the under 16 to under 19 classes, and they are Susan Patterson, Kathleen Dale, Maureen Gionet, Vancouver, and Bruce Faddegon.

Intermediates, under 13 to under 15, are Joanne Dunkin, Miranda Wong, Maudie van Klaveren and Waltern Prossnitz.

Under eight to under 12 juniors are Lisa Garner, Geoffrey Jay, Gloria Wong and Anna Lowe.

Adjudicator Clive Lythgoe, who is to make his Carnegie Hall debut on May 5, performing Brahms' second concerto with the American Symphony, has repeatedly declared his amazement and delight with the "great stable of young pianists" he has found here.

"In the open classes almost any one of them could play in Wigmore Hall (London) now and draw favorable reviews from the critics," he comments.

He has also wondered that people will pay fancy prices to hear imported talent but seem disinclined to pay 75 cents to hear really fantastic recitals—which is how he characterizes many of the piano sessions.

Friday night at First United Fellowship Hall, the speech arts honor performance and senior championship competition was held.

Rosalind Scott, presenting Robinson Jeffers' The Caged Eagle's Death Dream, won the bursary award. Runners-up were Kathy Popham and Hilary Scott.

Chosen by adjudicator Gay Scrivener or the honor program were John Panks, Michael Purdon, Susan Lippa, Tina Milino, Donald Hayes, Veronica Cooper, Joanne Evans, Nancy Benjamin, Jean Oxby, Nona Avren, Sheila Reardon, Martha Readings, Ruth Chudley, mimists Kirsten Chudley and Katherine Anne Olafson and two speech choirs from Margaret Jenkins and Macaulay Schools.

Ford Men Share Prosperity

DETROIT (UPI) — The top 51 executives of Ford Motor Co. shared in the automaker's prosperity in 1972 to the tune of $12,919,116 in salaries, fees and other compensations.

In contrast, 56 directors and officers of the nation's second largest auto firm received $11,339,851 in 1971 and $8,917,184 in 1970 when the group consisted of 54 members.

The figures were contained in the company's notice to its shareholders of the annual meeting May 10. The company began mailing the notice to its stockholders Friday.

Henry Ford II, chairman of the board, and Lee A. Iacocca, president, received the highest compensation in 1972, a record year for Ford which earned $870 million on worldwide sales of $20.2 billion.

The chairman received $817,567 in salaries, fees and supplemental compensation based on the earnings, while Iacocca was paid $861,290. The previous year, Ford had received a total of $689,000 and Iacocca $675,000.

No Torture Seen, Heard By PoW

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Navy Capt. Walter E. Wilber, who admits making anti-war broadcasts voluntarily while a prisoner in North Vietnam, says he was never tortured or beaten and "never saw or heard" of other PoWs being mistreated.

"I never heard anybody scream out, either from nightmares or injury or being threatened," said the 43-year-old fighter squadron commander from Columbia Crossroads, Pa., shot down in 1968.

Wilber acknowledged that other PoWs told him of being tortured.

"They sounded convincing to me, but no one had any evidence to show," Wilber told reporters Friday.

"However, I don't want to detract from the brave men who were captured between 1964 and 1968. They suffered more than I."

THEFT WAS A CAPPER

PORT ALBERNI (CP) — M. L. Smith returned home and found five bottles of beer missing, a broken window and a note.

The note read: "Sorry about the window. Didn't take anything worth any money. No hard feelings please." It was signed: "Burglars."

Lessons on Jesus Break Taboo

By MARCUS ELIASON

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel has smasher a major taboo by giving 13-year-old pupils their first real lesson on the life of Jesus and the growth of Christianity.

Trying to escape the wrath of ultra-Orthodox Jews, teachers take a low-key approach, sticking to history and avoiding theological controversy.

The issue of who killed Christ is handled in a few words, and the name Judas never appears in the syllabus because, as an official teachers' guidebook says, the question "may arouse emotional reactions among the pubils."

But in a country where many immigrants have known little comfort among Christians, and where some Jews still spit on the ground at the mere mention of "Yeshu," the introduction of Christianity into Israeli classrooms is striking.

COURSE BRIEF

The program, brought into the seventh grade last year, covers its ground in four one-hour lessons.

This is hardly exhaustive but in previous years pupils spent 30 minutes of their 12 years of schooling thumbing through a few pages on the subject.

A 35-page textbook recommended by the education minstry tells the story of Jesus tersely. It describes Roman oppression in the Holy Land and the profusion of self-styled messiahs promising a better after-live. Then it continues:

"Into this reality, Jesus was born. Little is known of his life, and less of his childhood."

The textbook portrays Jo-Jews and Mary as observant Jews who always spent the Passover festival in Jerusalem, "and it is easy to imagine how the holy places in Jerusalem were impressed upon the mind of the Galilean boy from Nazareth."

IMPRESSED BY JOHN

Then came "a turning point in Jesus' life, following his encounter with John the Baptist.

"This John appeared in Jericho, publicly proclaimed the coming of the Kingdom of Heaven, and called on Jews to prepare for it . . ."

The pamphlet quotes at length from Jesus' teachings, describes the miracles, then reaches the story of the Cruicifixion:

"The authorities could not ignore this man claiming to be a messiah, disrupting public order and predicting the destruction of the temple . . .

"Jesus was arrested by emissaries of the high priest and was brought for interrogation. During questioning Jesus proclaimed himself the messiah and son of God. Upon hearing his, the priest rent his clothes and ordered Jesus' trial by the Roman ruler Pontius Pilate . . .

"He was sentenced to cruicifixion as a rebel against the empire."

Later, the textbook deals with Christian hatred toward Jews as supposed killers of Christ. It teaches simply: "The Christians blamed the entire Jewish people for the crucifixion of Jesus and went even further, placing responsibility on Jews for all the generations to come."

ANNOYS ORTHODOX

Despite its approach, the Christianity syllabus has aroused the ire of Israel's Ordthodox Jews. Says Rabbi Menahem Porush, a religious political leader:

"We oppose it because it damages Jewish sensibilities.

"There is no good reason to plant these things in the brains of our children in the land of Israel . . . After all we have suffered from Christians, a knowledge of their history can do no good for Israeli children."

Shevah Eden, the education ministry's director of school syllabuses, comments: "It would be absurd to teach history without taking in Christianity's impact on civilization."

As one education official put it: "Israel is adult enough to take an objective look at other religions. We are no longer a persecuted people and we have nothing to fear from knowing what Christianity is."

God's Commands Much Harsher

JERUSALEM (AP) — One of the Dead Sea Scrolls just deciphered in Israel contains a new, hitherto unknown version of God's commands to Moses and is far more puritanical than Biblical injunctions, archeologist Yigal Yadin reports.

It also offers insights into what formed the basis of Christianity, which was just starting when the scroll was written, Yadin adds.

The "Temple Scroll" is the longest — nearly 30 feet — of all the parchments and leathers found near Zumran on the western shore of the Dead Sea, lowest spot on earth.

Yadin, speaking at Hebrew University this week, said he bought the scroll from an Arab antiquities dealer in Bethlehem during the 1967 war for nearly $100,000.

The Bible says God gave Moses the Ten Commandments, plus 603 other rules, that included what animals and fish to eat and how far one can walk to attend prayers. The scroll version of the Ten Commandments did not differ from that of the Bible. But many other of God's dictates were much harsher, Yadin said. He did not elaborate.

He reported these other aspects of the scroll:

—It is written in the first person, as if God were speaking, rather than the third person of the Old Testament.

—It contains laws never mentioned in the Bible, such as one that Jews must choose a king and build a temple.

—It gives an intricate explanation of how the Jewish temple in Jerusalem should be built, and what kind of city Jerusalem should be.

Yadin says he believes the Zumran sect wrote the laws in Hebrew about two centuries before Christ. They were copied onto the Temple Scroll during Christ's time.

The scroll ordered priests to be celibate and banned bigamy and divorce.

GARDENING

jack beastall

The number of gardeners seeking advice on starting seeds indoors has increased this year. For the majority it appears to be their first attempt.

They have their problems, the usual problems encountered by beginners with indoor conditions, too high a temperature with insufficient ventilation, air too dry, poor light intensity and overwatering.

Being sure such problems will be overcome as experience is accumulated, my advice is not to dwell on frustration and disappointment, but to start over again with confidence, remembering the limitations caused by indoor conditions.

These problems are minor compared with those which will appear later.

Assuming reasonable success in germinating seed and rearing to the seedling stage, where are these seedlings to be kept when transferred to boxes and spaced two inches apart for development into usable plants?

Where can all these boxes be placed outdoors under protection while the plants become accustomed to outdoor conditions before transferring to the open garden in late April to late May?

About this I am not so confident since no one with whom I have spoken has a coldframe nor any idea of making such a structure.

That gardeners in general are prejudiced regarding coldframes is obvious, most having a preconceived idea of great expense, intricate construction, and lack of space.

When the desire is for a three hundred dollar patio and outdoor barbecue, money, means of construction, and space is no obstacle, but to invest five dollars in two old window sash and some scrap lumber in order to grow all the flower and vegetable seedlings one will need is an idea that meets with strong objection.

A coldframe can be as elaborate or as simple as the gardener desires. Basically it is a temporary protection for half-hardy plants, therefore it can be a temporary structure to be erected when needed, and stored when its period of usefulness is ended. Such a frame is shown in the illustration.

Frames built this way, ranging from three to 15 feet in length, have been used for commercial production of bedding annuals and vegetables, lasting 25 years because they were easily stored under cover when not in use.

Lumber can be old shiplap as shown in the drawing, discarded tongue and groove, or narrow strips left over from outdoor three-ply.

Covers are old window sash picked up at demolition sales or house wreckers' yards.

No dimensions are given because width and length depend on the size of the sash and the number of sash necessary to make a frame of the desired size. Obtain the sash first, remembering that a large frame holds a steady temperature better than a small frame.

Two pieces of shiplap will give a back about 14 inches high. These are held together by cleats as shown, the pair at each end spaced to receive the end pieces of the frame, those in the centre to keep the centre sash slide bar in place.

The two end pieces are two boards the same width as the back with holding cleats on the outside, and a 2-by-2 or 2-by-4 on the inside sloping to form a slide for the sash. These end pieces are not cut on a slope, they are left square to form a heat trap and lessen the effect of chill winds striking the warm glass.

The front is a single piece of shiplap, about seven or eight inches wide, with cleats spaced the same as on the back.

The removable sash bar (or bars) for the centre are made from a piece of 2 by 2 nailed to a piece of 2 by 4, the 2 by 2 extending about three inches each end to rest on the back and the front boards.

None of the pieces are permanently nailed together, but held rigidly in place by the stakes which are odd pieces of 2 by 4 pointed with an axe.

To set up the frame, drive two or more stakes in a straight line and lean the back board against these stakes.

Insert the end pieces between the cleats attached to the back, then put the front into place and drive a stake at each end to hold the frame tightly together.

Put a centre sash bar in place and fit one of the sash into the slides. If the frame is not square it can be easily adjusted with push on one corner.

On a multi-sash frame, drive a few more stakes as needed to keep front and back boards in a reasonably stright line.

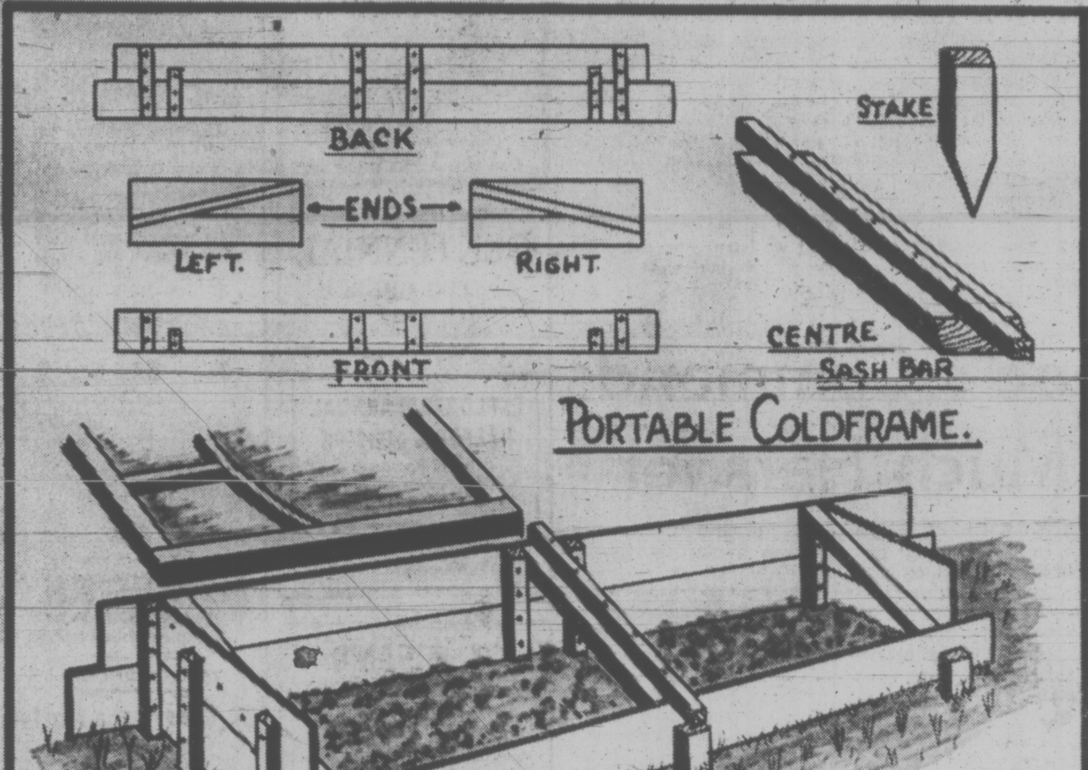
Shiplap, tongue-and-groove, or outdoor three ply are recommended so that no cold draughts will jet through cracks and kill the seedlings. If smooth edged boards are used it will be necessary to nail lath over the joins between the boards or line the inside with polythene film.

Sliding covers are preferred to hinged covers. When sliding they can be opened an inch or so top or bottom, blocked open either side according to wind direction, and both covers and sash bars completely removed when working in the frame.

The whole structure packs neatly into a small space in garage or basement for storage. Being portable it can be set up in any part of the garden, even over a few rows of early sown vegetables, later to be moved to where tomatoes and squash are planted out, then put over peppers and eggplants for the summer, used for starting cuttings in August, or over lettuce and carrots for the winter.

In fact, after a little experimenting it will be found useful every day of the year, portability being its main feature rather than ease of storage.

Since a frame of this type is essential to producing good plants from seed it is the first thing to construct if you are starting seed indoors. My suggestion, based on experience, is that you construct a frame right away, thus avoiding the really big problems that are hiding around corners waiting for the unwary beginner.



WORK FOR WEEK

Early spring and winter heathers may be cut back now as blooms cease. Ones which flowered last summer or fall and were not trimmed back should be done lightly now before new growth is far advanced. Otherwise leave them until the new flowers fade.

If your soil is warming (sandy and gravelly soils warm earlier than clay) gladioli may be planted; otherwise hold until later for glads will only rot in a cold wet soil.

Rooted cuttings of early flowering chrysanthemums can be planted out into a soil rich in humus. Give them a mostly sunny place.

Prune privet hedges, and honeysuckle (the evergreen small-leaf Lonicera nitida); and evergreen upright Chamaecyperis varities can be sheared.

Plant out sweet peas raised indoors or in coldframe, after proper hardening off gradually to outdoor cooler temperatures.

If you have a heated greenhouse, sow musk melon seeds. Grow the plants in deep boxes or raised ground bed in greenhouse all summer unless you have glass cloches in a sunny warm garden.

In any raised or easily worked humusy soil outdoors make a small sowing of hardy vegetables: a few carrots, onions, leaf lettuce, peas and spinach. Put out a few early summer cabbage plants. Do not sow complete vegetable patch; successive small sowings are more profitable.

Open Up! It's the Rat Cops!

PARIS (AP) — Footsteps in the hall, a knock at the door and a voice that seems to be announcing: "It's the rat cops, open up."

"What? Who?" the lady says, with a bit of a tremble.

"Le Service de Lutte Contre les Rongeurs de la Prefecture de Police," is the reply. It sounds a little more prosaic in English—the police service to combat rodents. The men at the door can order a Parisian to open up for investigatioon.

The detective work gets serious in early spring when the rat squad's rat semester begins. It is an intensive two-month period when big yellow handbills go up in public buildings announcing the campaign, concierges begin scurrying to clean up filthy basements, and the rat cops fan out in the city.

They are a unique group of 16 men. As far as their director, Dr. Lucienne Corre-Hurst, knows, no other police department in the world has anything like the squad of trained investigators who hunt for the sources of rat infestation.

FEAR RUNS DEEP

A fascination and fear of rats run deep in the French psyche. Emile Zola's novels are full of rats. Parisians were forced to eat them during the 1870 siege in the Franco-Prussian War. A 1920 outbreak of bubonic plague, transported by rat lice, led to the creation of the rodent service.

The service has expanded to include street investigators and a laboratory operation which not only examines captured rats for the presence of disease but tests products like rat killers and rat-proof garbage cans and pipe covers.

Dr. Corre-Hurst says the problem is not killing rats, but making sure that they don't reappear.

"That's why we are different," she said. "People come to us from round the world for advice on how we handle our problems."

The biggest recent problem involved the closure of Les Halles, the central market, in 1969. Newspapers at the time warned of a wave of starved rats that might rush into the streets once they were deprived of their usual sources of food, but Dr. Corre-Hurst said the problem never arose.

"I told the city council beforehand that we could deal with Les Halles without difficulty if I could send men in 18 months before it closed. That's what we did, combing 2,000 buildings from top to bottom. There was never any problem."

Like Simenon's Inspector Maigret who often feels affection for the people he tracks down, Dr. Corre-Hurst has a warm relationship with the Paris rats.

"I don't hate them," she said in a soft, grandmotherly voice. "They're not vicious. They're just wild. They attack man only when they're trapped. It's a defence reflex. They're kind of friendly, actually.

CONFUSED?

Sometimes it is difficult to find your way through all the claims and counter-claims of advertising media.

But there is one no-nonsense report that tells it exactly like it is—not like we (or anyone else) dreams it to be.

That's the report of the Audit Bureau of Circulations, an advertiser controlled circulation fact-finding and fact-reporting organization.

Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Matilda, my waltzing mouse, is beginning to bite me. She never used to do this. In fact, she was always a perfect angel. I really haven't given her any reason to be mad at me, so I can't understand this change in her behavior. It is very disappointing when we have always been so close. Do you have any idea as to the why? — T. M.

DEAR T. M.: Waltzing Matilda may be becoming ancient and is simply a bit crotchety. While you didn't mention her age, she's of a species which shouldn't expect to see the four seasons twice. Should she still be a comparative youngster, however, her belligerence might be related to other problems — like, lack of a proper (or improper) waltzing partner, for example.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Tootsweet, my parakeet, has always been a clean bird so I was surprised when I noticed one of his feet getting dark and, I thought, dirty. So I bathed his foot and scrubbed it and it didn't have any effect. The darkness is actually, I guess, a change of color in the foot. It gets darker toward the toenails. Is this something to worry about or is it a temporary condition of some kind? — B. B.

DEAR B. B.: Yes, you can worry; but better yet, get him in — Tootsweet, I mean — to the doctor to see if something can be done about the condition. Usually the described appearance is due to serious disturbance in circulation in the foot. Gangrene is, unfortunately, a frequent complication. This problem is much more likely to occur when the bird's cage is not kept clean. The condition is frequently related to infection by organisms which may be found in the droppings.

DEAR DR. MILLER: My sister's dog — his name is Homer — has developed a fumy habit. He shakes his head a lot, sometimes quite hard but we can't understand whether he is saying no or yes. What do you think? — S. E.

DEAR S.E.: Probably he is saying, "Please!" or "Help!" Homer's head-shaking is most likely an indication of a painful ear condition. Whatever the cause of his distress, he obviously needs the doctor's help. The longer Homer's neglected, the more pain he has to go through and the more difficult it will be to cure the condition when he is treated. Don't delay another day!

Clean-Air Crisis May Curb Cars In Boston Area

By PAUL GIGUERE

BOSTON (Reuter) — A clean-air crisis may force a 40 to 45-per cent cut in automobile travel in Boston within a few years to comply with the standards set by the federal Environmental Protection Agency (EPA).

State and city officials are trying to figure out how to meet the stringent Federal Clean Air Act of 1970. The standards must be met by May 31, 1975, but a two-year extension may be granted in which to tackle the problem before the boom falls.

The state must submit a package "compliance proposal" to the regional EPA by April 15. The EPA will then have until July 1 to accept, reject or suggest changes in the plan.

Increased reliance on public transportation and car pools is seen by local officials as one way of curbing air pollution caused by the heavy volume of car traffic in the metropolitan area.

Thought is also being given to limiting parking space in Boston, levying a special tax on parking and establishing a priority sticker system to keep out "non-essential" vehicles during high-pollution periods, state officials said.

SEEK SHARP REDUCTION

Paul Keough, acting communications director for the regional EPA, said the objective is a possible reduction of 40 to 45 per cent of vehicle miles travelled in Metropolitan Boston.

While another clean-air control phase is aimed at "stationary polluters," such as factories, autos would have to be the principal target, with buses and trucks treated as more essential.

He noted that for the first time the federal government feels justified in telling motorists when and where they can drive.

This federal attitude, he said, is based upon the philosophy that one citizen does not have the right to poison the air of his neighbor. He compared the approach to a new Massachusetts state law banning open fires in the backyard of a home.

Keough said, however, that the success of the transportation control strategy will depend largely upon public willingness to use public transportation systems—for which the city has a half billion dollar improvement program planned over the next decade—and car pools. "National Guard troops won't be stationed to keep cars out of Boston," he said.

STATE HAS POWERS

But the program will have enough impact to make commuters think twice about driving to work all alone in a car, said an environmental planner for the state.

Under so-called "episodic controls," the state would be empowered to reduce traffic from 20 to as much as 80 per cent, depending on the seriousness of pollution. Special fast-lanes would be provided on expressways for emergency vehicles.

North Economy Hit by U.S. Ruling on Ivory

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T. (CP) — A United States moratorium banning the importation of the skins and ivory of Arctic marine animals has knocked a gaping hole in the hunting economy of Canadian Eskimos.

The U.S. ban, which went into effect Dec. 21 as the Marine Mammal Protection Act, affects polar bears, walrus, narwhal and possibly seals—the main livelihood of the remaining Eskimo hunters of the Northwest Territories.

Territorial councillors sitting in Yellowknife in January for their 48th session expressed dismay at the moratorium.

"We're talking about everything the Eskimo people have to make a living from," said Lyle Trimble of Aklavik, N.W.T., dean of the council.

Already, the ban on polar bear skins has virtually wiped out a territorial sports hunting program that would have brought as much as $70,000 into isolated communities suffering serious economic depression.

Fears are also growing that the ban might cripple that part of the shaky Eskimo economy based on sculpture in whalebone, walrus and narwhal ivory and the manufacture of garments and handicrafts from seal skins.

The council has said that hunts of marine animals are strictly controlled and that quotas are set by biologists concerned about the preservation of the species involved.

This year, Eskimo hunters in the Canadian Arctic will be permitted to take a quota of 445 polar bears ranging from a settlement quota of 60 at Coral Harbor on Southampton Island to zero in communities where bear populations are low.

A special committee of biologists has recommended that the quota be increased by 58.

Polar bears are completely protected by law in the Soviet Union and the United States and have been placed on the endangered species list by the International Union for the Conservation of Nature.

Northern scientists said, however, that while polar bear populations in other countries have declined drastically during the last 30 years, the population in Canada's main denning area along the southern coast of Hudson Bay is on the increase.

It is from the Eskimos' traditional quota of polar bears that the controversial sports hunting program evolved.

Under the territorial regulations, an Eskimo community can sell some of its annual allotment of polar bear tags to sports hunters for a fee of $2,500 a tag.

The hunters must then hire Eskimo guides from the community and hunt the polar bears by dog team on the sea ice. There is no guarantee of a kill.

This program, which has become increasingly popular among impoverished Eskimo communities, has been the hardest hit by the U.S. ban. Ninety per cent of the hunters willing to spend the $5,000 or more generally required for the whole hunt, including transportation, come from the U.S.

Authorities said few hunters would be willing to participate in the hunt if they couldn't bring home the trophy.

The only councillor that spoke in favor of the U.S. move was Eastern Arctic member Bryan Pearson.

"I'm saying cut out sports hunting, the silly slaughter that produced $25,000 for the coffers of the territorial government. Big deal."

Mr. Pearson said, however, he is not opposed to Eskimos maintaining their traditional rights.

SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1973

SECOND SECTION

IT DOESN'T LOOK LIKE IT, but this is a public highway. It's Terrace Avenue in the city's special Rockland zone, a carefully preserved lane which at some points looks like little more than a footpath. City zoning regulations give this backwater special protection from building development. (John McKay photos.)

James Bay Also Wants Rockland-Like Zoning

By ROLAND MORGAN
Times Staff

A decision is expected shortly from Victoria's advisory planning commision on the future of the James Bay area.

The 15-member commission is studying, behind closed doors, a new James Bay plan which would modify a boom-or-bust 1968 plan which gave carte-blanche to apartment developers.

However, the suggested new plan still sets James Bay's population target at about 17,000, puts hundreds of older houses under the developer's axe and generally dooms the James Bay neighborhood, as it is now known.

And concerned James Bay residents are asking: "Why us?"

Recently the community association executive formally called on city council to explain why high population densities and destruction of old neighborhoods was all right for James Bay, but not all right for Rockland area (the vicinity north of Government House).

Rockland is the only city area, apart from the Inner zoning.

It's called R-1 (a), or Rockland zoning, and it was specially created to preserve the Rockland neighborhood in just the manner the James Bay Community Association would like to see James Bay protected.

There's a hefty minimum floor area for new buildings, should they occur. No "townhouses" for Rockland.

There are spacious setback regulations so that everything has a big garden in keeping with the current atmosphere of the district. No "up-against-the-wall" building for Rockland.

Asked to sum up what the modifications of normal residential zoning meant in Rockland, a planning officer said: "It's set up in a way that generally encourages the preservation of existing houses."

So the tree-lined boulevards of Rockland are, by official edict, protected sanctuaries of gracious living. Secluded Terrace Avenue, barely 10 feet wide, sometimes little more than a footpath, will not in the near future be widened for commuter traffic or turned into a service road for a sprawling apartment building.

Why then, wonder James Bay property owners and concerned tenants alike, must their area be thrown into apartment development? They feel the area now offers the kind of older, cheaper housing which city officials readily admit the city badly lacks.

The community association's suggestion is that James Bay, too, should have its own zoning category. Perhaps a special community plan zone, they say, which would set a design for a varied community combining many different forms of housing, different forms of shopping and well-thought-out community services.

Also on the scene is a new James Bay ratepayers' group led by Ald. Percy Frampton and highrise developer Jim Mace. This group basically favors the current apartment zoning for James Bay.

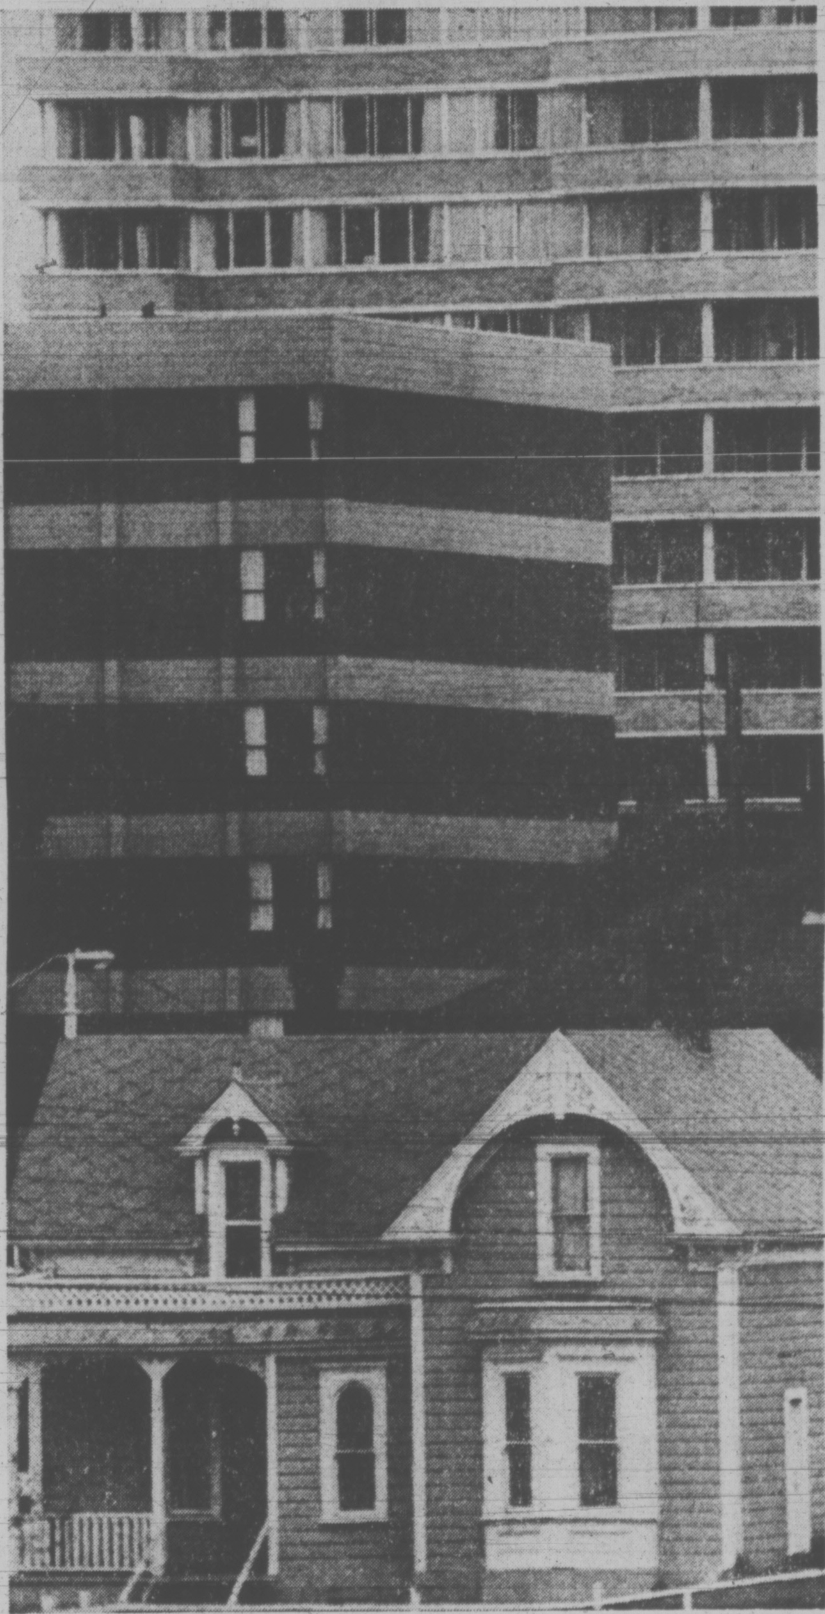
Meanwhile the advisory planning commission is expected to hand in its recommendation within a week or two and council then must decide what action to take.

Council may decide to take no immediate action and heed a third request from the James Bay community association — to leave a building freeze on the area while they determine what the residents want for their neighborhood.



A TYPICAL James Bay house at Oswego and Simcoe looks like a child's cut-out against the austere backdrop of apartment blocks in one of the area's highrise sectors. Zoning plans mean the house's days are numbered.

Parents To Blame —Whitbread

Parents are to blame if their children contract diphtheria, Greater Victoria's senior public health officer said today.

An immunization program currently protects 80 to 90 per cent of children but getting immunization requires the consent of parents, said Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread.

There have been four cases and 29 carriers identified in B.C. to date this year and Whitebread agreed with a statement by Health Minister Dennis Cocke Friday that diphtheria "is a potentially explosive hazard."

An immunization level of 70 per cent will prevent an epidemic, he added.

Infants receive their first immunization in their first year if parents take them to one of the health board's well-baby clincs. There are three boosters given through the elementary school years if parents give consent.

'Frustrations In Vietnam'

A change in topic is announced for the noon meeting of the Men's Canadian Club, April 10, in the Old Forge dining room.

Gen. A. E. Wrinch, formerly of Hazleton, B.C., and serving for many years as national commissioner of the Canadian Red Cross, will address members on the subject of Frustrations in Vietnam.

Rebel Nuns Won't Be at Meeting

A letter Friday to Bishop Remi de Roo and Sister Leonette Hoesing from five Sisters in the Society of the Love of Jesus states emphatically they will not attend a society meeting next Thursday.

Three of the Sisters have been sitting in at St. Mary's Priory for 24 days in a dispute among members over control of the society.

The letter is highly critical of both the bishop and Sister Leonette on a number of issues and demands that security guards which have kept the Sisters from most of the priory building be removed. A guard was still on duty this morning.

Neither Bishop de Roo nor Sister Leonette could be reached for comment.

Of next week's meeting, the letter says in part:

"Just don't hold your breath waiting for any of us to show up because we know full well what you have in mind, which is to bring those ringers and proxies in from Yankton (a religious order in S. Dakota) and other places, out vote us, get around the quorum rule by saying you've got 100 per cent of the Sisters habitually in residence in the Priory, and then railroad through the agenda.

"We just don't think it's going to work."

Sister Mary Agnes Eaton said today the letter was signed by herself and Sisters Mary Josephine Donovan and Mary Lucy Ford, the three Sisters sitting in, as well as Mother Cecilia Mary and Sister Mary Julia Kelly, the latter two working at the Good Shepherd animal shelter at Mill Bay. Mother Cecilia is founder of the order and was mother prioress for many years.

The dissidents claim that Sister Leonette was improperly elected mother prioress and have refused to recognize her authority. Leonette and some other members of the society have established a new priory residence across Goldstream Avenue from the building occupied by the three Sisters.

The letter is signed first by Sister Eaton and says at one point:

"I don't intend to go into a recital of all of the petty persecutions which we have suffered at the hands of Sister Leonette . . . ." but there has been discrimination in the matter of food supplies.

AMBULANCE TALKS MONDAY

Employees of Garden City Ambulance will meet Ald. Percy Frampton Monday, a development which ends for now the threat of a walkout by the men providing emergency ambulance service in the city.

Frampton is chairman of city council's health committee and the employees are worried about their jobs when Garden City's contract with Victoria ends June 30.

The city has indicated that emergency ambulance service will be reorganized and operated out of Victoria General Hospital on an interim basis, with the prospect of a regional ambulance service ultimately being organized by the provincial government.

"I didn't see any point in the meeting," Frampton said today, "but I told them if they wanted to talk, I'd happy to listen to them."

He had earlier indicated that Victoria will insist of fulfilment of its contract with Garden City and what the ambulance service's employees do is beside the point.

Ed Pheifle, one of the nine employees involved, said a delegation of three or four would meet Frampton Monday morning.

"As long as we've got our meeting, we're satisfied," he said.

The men are worried about what qualifications will be required of the staff of six expected to be hired to operate the single ambulance the city intends buying.

Kootenay Next Out

The escort vessel Kootenay, currently at CFB Esquimalt, has been designated as the vessel to relieve the destroyer-escort Terra Nova, defence minister James Richardson said Friday in Ottawa.

The Esquimalt-based Terra Nova is in Bangkok, Thailand, as part pf the contingency plan to remove Canadian observers from Vietnam, if necessary.

The vessel has clearance to visit Hong Kong, Subic Bay near Manila in the Philippines, and Singapore. All other visists must be cleared by Maritime Command Pacific in Esquimalt and national defence headquarters in Ottawa.

Richardson could not say when or if the Terra Nova will be relieved, as much depends on how long Canadians will remain in Vietnam.

The ship is only one part of the Canadian evacuation contingency plan. An armed forces plane is almost always on hand in southeast Asia.

Lost in the Woods, One Little Creek

EVEN AFTER A lengthy association with running water, I'm not sure at what point a stream ceases to be rated as a creek and merits the status of riverhood. My dictionary offers only limited help. It lists a creek as "a small stream, often a shallow or intermittent tributary to a river", and in a sly attempt at buck-passing, further defines it as a brook. Then it hastens on to deal with creel, "a wicker basket, especially one used by anglers for carrying fish".

It could have added that only a madman or a masochist would bushwhack his way along a typical brushy creek with any receptacle as awkward as a creel snagging itself in every thicket.

But precise definition apart, the creeks I like best are those whose tiny flowages slip along furtively through heavy cover. Except at the height of a freshet, they don't draw attention to themselves. Their pools are confined and secretive. The fisherman with enough spring in his legs for a standing jump can span their riffles without wetting his boots.

In April they fill their brown beds comfortably. By August of a hot summer they have diminished to thin trickles, or to chains of shrunken pools fed by underground seepage.

The highways department rarely dignifies them with bridges. It stuffs them under the blacktop through steel culverts, and they find their way to salt water as best they can.

Few grownup anglers waste time on the little creeks, which are devilish difficult to cope with. The fly fisherman is almost ridiculously out of place on them and the spin caster only less so. They demand stealth, ingenuity, infinite patience, an approach unencumbered by purist conviction and a willingness to accept small rewards for large effort.

These requirments call for a boy of 12 years old or thereabouts, with a can of worms or a jar of salmon eggs, and a no-nonsense attitude toward any trout that grabs hold. He knows that where dainty tactics fail, the quick heave-ho may succeed.

In our home district there are several minor creeks that might well have been made to order for boys with fishing in mind. Last fall, while prospecting a saltwater beach for the sea-run cutthroat that had vanished after the first rain-laden southeaster, I watched a few determined coho threshing their way into one of these rivulets.

It seemed logical to assume that the lost cutthroat had also buttoned themselves into the little creeks to feast on dropped salmon eggs, and other available tidbits while ripening for their own late-winter spawning.

But I didn't put my hypothesis to the test, and forgot about it until the afternoon a couple of weeks ago when we gave two local boys a lift home from school.

After classes the day before, they had taken some worms from Jimmy's garden on an excursion up a creek, and come back with trout for their dinner.

My ears perked at this report. What size were their fish?

"One was about a foot long," Jimmy said.

His companion in the venture added casually, "I hooked a bigger one but it got off."

At this point it occured to me that Win and I had been shamefully neglecting our own fishing, and should take steps next weekend to correct that situation.

Our place isn't rich in garden worms, and conscience suggested that we should leave the few we are blessed with to improve the soil.

Still, if the creek cutthroat were partial to worms, it would be folly to deny them.

By hard digging, we rounded up a few crawlers. We were readying our tackle when my wife paused, consulted the calendar, then asked a question.

"Do you know what day this is?"

"Sure," I told her. "It's April Fool's Day, and don't try anything."

"I don't need to," Win said. "Our fishing licences expired yesterday, and we forgot to pick up new ones."

We returned our worms to the garden patch and put our gear away.

Boys, after all, don't need fishing licences.

Doing The Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

A delightful dress shop in Sidney . . .

You couldn't really call it serendipity when we drove out to Sidney last week and "discovered" that jewel of a dress shop named "The Holly Tree" . . . because we knew beforehand exactly what we were looking for . . . But finding and visiting this truly delightful shop certainly made our day! . . . It's a real pleasure to walk in to . . . Walls colorful with paintings by local artists (which you can buy on the spot if one of them takes your fancy) . . . A charming lady to greet you . . . And the clothes on display . . . well you simply must see them! . . . Dresses and suits and pantsuits so tastefully chosen . . . of such quality and casual smartness . . . that even a blase shopper like us coveted practically everything in sight! (We actually did walk out with a pantsuit which we simply couldn't resist!) . . . New things just unpacked included a replica of the dress Liza Minelli wore at the Academy Awards . . . only this one in bright orange . . . Some darling seerusucker dresses with jackets . . . A pretty polyester jersey jacket dress with tie neck and knife-pleated skirt . . . A terrific 3-piece pantsuit with long jacket . . . skirt and pants . . . Golf skirts and tailored blouses (a good selection of the popular Ports blouses) which should go a long way towards helping you battle par . . . plus other smart, casual clothes we cannot even begin to tell you about today . . . So make your own discoveries at . . . The Holly Tree, 2354 Beacon Ave., Sidney. 656-5212.

Checks in all sizes and shapes, very often mixed together, are decidedly defined in their bright, young way.

New shirt blouses from Liberty . . .

The spring crop of Liberty lawn blouses to hand at Wilson's . . . and we're happy to report that the prints and colors are as beguiling as ever! . . . Just no way you can ever mistake a Liberty design . . . they're in a class by themselves . . . The new arrivals are mostly small florals . . . dainty as all get-out, poised on either dark or light backgrounds . . . A new design this season . . . and to our mind one of the prettiest in years . . . is an all-over pansy print in colors to blend with just about anything you own . . . The blouses themselves are shirtwaists with long sleeves, convertible necklines and straight bottoms . . . which can be worn either tucked in or over your pants and skirts . . . All of these meticulously tailored by Hathaway . . . Also by Hathaway are the new Viyellas . . . in browns and gold, and shades of blue, plaid . . . and black and white checks . . . These have shirt tails . . . as do the crisp-looking shirts of twill-textured cotton with rounded collars . . . striped in red, yellow or blue on white . . . All newly-arrived at W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

The new plaids are muted and soft, with no relationship to the bright solids and checks.

Step out in Florsheims this spring . . .

One of the things we like most about Florsheim shoes . . . apart from their smooth fit and wonderful comfort . . . is that they're not "too" of anything! . . . Not too extreme . . . not too expensive . . . But they do follow all the latest fashion trends in fine footwear . . . at Munday's this week we saw their new Florsheim shoes for spring . . . One of the most popular is a graceful pump with medium heel . . . in a 3-toned patchwork effect of bone, brown and taupe . . . Same shoe in red, white and navy . . . or two-toned navy and white . . . A nice dressy sandal type shoe . . . open toe and heel, closed top . . . comes in a very soft matte-finish white cape as well as in navy and black patent . . . While a true sandal with ¼" platform has wide draped straps of soft cape leather . . . One of the big patterns in the U.S. is a shoe with the spectator look . . . tan with a white vamp . . . Lower heeled Florsheims . . . great for stepping out in these lovely spring days . . . include a white or beige punched leather strapped shoe which has a basket-weave look . . . and a similar shoe with T-strap and slightly lower heel, in either white or navy . . . A popular new pattern is a trim pump in black or navy patent or bone calf . . . Just arrived is a smart walking shoe with crepe sole in beige leather with bone vamp and trim . . . Most of these new shoes have matching bags, priced at $32 . . . shoes themselves are tagged at $30 at . . . Munday's, 1203 Douglas St., 383-2211.

According to Time magazine, high platform shoes have reached their peak and are on the way out.

Happy news for graduates and bridesmaids . . .

Knowing Miss Frith's as well as we do . . . we weren't a bit surprised when we popped in on Monday to find their usual nice assortment of clothes and millinery for Easter and springtime . . . and summer coming up . . . But something rather special did catch our eye . . . a new selection of delightful dresses for bridesmaids . . . and, we thought, equally appropriate for sweet girl graduates . . . with price tags all under $40! . . . There seems to be an emphasis on holding down the price line on this sort of dress at Miss Frith's . . . and while, of course, they do have more expensive bridesmaid dresses . . . we'd personally settle for one of these under-$40 numbers any day . . . because it's the effect that counts . . . and every last one of these is well calculated to delight the eye and present a pretty picture on wedding or graduation day! There's a really good selection of colors, styles and sizes . . . The full-sleeved flowered sheers with either scoop or high ruffled necks we thought especially pretty . . . along with the sparkly crystaline sheer dresses with their short puff sleeves and lace trim . . . How these latter can be sold for $35 in this day and age we'll never know! . . . Another delightful style features an eyelet embroidery collar and waistband on polyester crepe . . . A fortrel crepe with scoop neck has that uncluttered look we approve of . . . Other delightful types too . . . Great way to look like a million for less than $40! . . . Miss Frith Fashions, 1619 Douglas St., 383-7181.

Pearls are very much "in" . . .

Diamonds may be a girl's best friend and we wouldn't dream of knocking them . . . but for sheer flattery, versatility and perfect-with-everything-ness . . . we'll take pearls! . . . So it's nice to know that pearls are making a real comeback in the jewellery fashion picture . . . Mr. de Goutiere pointed out to us when we visited his shop on Tuesday . . . He has a beautiful selection of cultured pearl necklaces . . . strands or all lengths and sizes . . . both uniform and graduated . . . ranging in price from $40 to $600 . . . Two- and three-strand pearl bracelets too, tagged at $100 and $175 . . . Pearl earrings, either drop or stud . . . As for rings, we saw a lovely baroque pearl set in 14k gold for just $63.25 . . . We also saw some new one-of-a-kind pendants and chains which we thought very unusual . . . One made from a free-form piece of pink tourmaline with a little garnet set in the bottom, mounted on a gold frame . . . $275 . . . and another contemporary design in 18k gold set with yellow and amber citrine . . . $285 . . . A new ring we hadn't seen before is lovely . . . a wide gold band with three oval garnets and six little diamonds . . . And speaking of diamonds . . . they're the birthstone for April, which means they bring luck to the April birthday girl in more ways than one! . . . You'll find a very good selection of fine quality diamond rings, earrings and estate diamonds at . . . de Goutiere Jeweller Ltd., 2524 Estevan Ave., 592-3224.

Bone or beige shoes are naturals with pastel dresses and separates.

"People are talking about . . ."

Yes, to plagiarize the heading for a feature in Vogue . . . People are talking about . . . Peter Church and his Oak Bay Design Studio . . . About the former for his artistry in interior designing of rooms . . . or re-doing of whole houses or apartments . . . and the latter because it's a Mecca for people in search of really out-of-the ordinary drapery and upholstery fabrics, fixtures and picture framing and furniture and wallpapers which you couldn't come by short of a personal visit to some sophisticated metropolitan centre . . . and maybe even then some! . . . Right now people are raving about a lot of gorgeous new imported fabrics whose like you'll find nowhere else in town . . . Crisp French silks in an amazing variety of colors . . . Velvets in a range of colors to knock your eye out . . . Exciting designs in drapery fabrics . . . The most beautiful white embroidered panels we've ever seen for glass curtains . . . We drooled over a stunning, very heavy drapery or bedspread fabric with its design of flowers and macaws . . . There are literally thousands of samples in every fabric you can think of . . . Some of the designs are tremendously subtle . . . We noticed a lot of elegant Chinese motifs, among others . . . If you want something a little out of the ordinary . . . something you won't find in any store . . . and that will not be duplicated in any other Victoria home . . . pay an early visit to . . . Oak Bay Design Studio, 2295 Oak Bay Ave., 592-9322.

French Eat Mules

PARIS (AP) — "Special Today — Mule Steak" said the sign on the window of Charles Fougeat's butcher shop in Montmarte.

"It's a real delicacy," said Fougeat, holding up a bright red cut. "You've never tasted such tender meat. Unfortunately, mules are getting rarer and we don't have enough of it."

Women of all ages came in off the Rue Riquet to pay $2.86 a pound for Fougeat's mule steak, only a few cents less than beef. But Fougeat doesn't sell beef. His spotless, white-tiled store is a "boucherie chevaline," one of the French capital's 1,600 retailers of horsemeat.

Since the middle of the 19th century, the French have been the world's largest consumers of horsemeat. It was known as "poor man's beef" then and cost a tenth what beef did. The story goes that Napoleon's soldiers discovered the nutritional value of their own transportation during the retreat from Moscow.

As tractors displaced horses on French farms, the country began importing its horsemeat and the price went up.

"People now eat horsemeat because they like it and because they think it's healthy, not because it's cheaper," said Fougeat.

The French are no more sentimental about horses than North Americans are about steers.

"I like to ride horses," said one man, "but I see nothing wrong with eating them when their time is up. It's excellent, tasty meat, and it never gives you tapeworm."

Unsweetened Pineapple Popular New Cooking Product

By MARY MOORE

As you know I often carry on about the price of fruit or filling for pies and have said more than once that pumpkin and lemon pies are the most economical.

Right now I am in love with the canned unsweetened pineapple in its own juice which I can buy for 39c for a 19-ounce tin. So I made a pineapple meringue pie which I think you will welcome and enjoy.

PINEAPPLE MERINGUE

Pastry
1 cup stirred but unsifted cake and pastry flour
½ tsp. salt
⅓ cup shortening
2 tbsp. butter
2 tbsp. cold water

Filling:
⅔ cup sugar (first amount)
¼ cup corn starch
½ tsp. salt
1 19-oz. can unsweetened crushed pineapple (packed in unsweetened pineapple juice)
1 tbsp. lemon juice
¾ cup hot water
3 eggs — yolks and whites separated
⅓ cup sugar (second amount for meringue)
⅛ tsp. cream of tartar

To make Pastry, cut shortening and butter into flour and salt until size of peas. Drizzle in water, tossing with a fork. Pack into ball between palms and roll out on floured board to fit nine inch deep pie plate. Line pie plate and flute edge. Prick shell all over with fork. Bake at 425 deg. Fahr. about 8 minutes — but keep your eye on it and remove from oven when tinged with gold.

To make Filling in a heavy pot combine sugar (first amount), corn starch, salt, pineapple and its juice and lemon juice and when well mixed stir in hot water and cook stirrring until thick and boiling. Mix a little of the hot filling with the egg yolks and then stir back into the filling over low heat for about one or two minutes. Pour into baked pie shell.

To make meringue beat egg whites with sugar (second amount) and cream of tartar until stiff and sugar crystals are all dissolved. Pile attractively on filling and bake at 375 deg. Fahr. until delicate gold — about 12 to 15 minutes.

This pie should be made at least 3 hours before serving time to slice neatly. It is delicious and a lovely change.

dear abby

Harsh Sentence Lauded by Reader

DEAR ABBY: Recently, a 17-year-old Florida boy pleaded guilty to possessing hallucinogenic drugs. He had also been charged with violence toward a Miami Beach police officer.

Judge Alfonso Sepe sentenced the youth to one year in the County Stockade and four years probation. The comments of the judge so impressed me that I ordered the transcript from the court reporter so that I may read it to my own children.

Your column is so widely read I am sending you the "lecture" Judge Sepe gave that boy in the presence of the grieving parents. I hope you will publish it and give it the national forum I think it deserves. —Mrs. A. L. Cates, Miami, Fla.

DEAR MRS. CATES: Rarely do I devote an entire column to one letter, but I agree, this is worth it. Here it is:

Judge Sepe spoke directly to the youth and said, "Do you know who is going to serve that year? Not you; your mother and father will serve that year.

"That is what's wrong. They get sentenced. They get sentenced for a lifetime.

"You serve a year. Your body is in the stockade for a year, but their souls are tormented for a lifetime. Why? Because you are a selfish, spoiled boy, that's why.

"There is no punishment in the world that I could inflict upon you that could in any way compensate for what you are doing to your mother and father. I have not spent five cents raising you. I didn't know you from Adam. But your mother and father have put their lives, their hearts, their sweat, their money and everything else they have into bringing you up. And now they have to sit in this courtroom and listen to a total stranger who had nothing to do with your upbringing scold you and put you in jail.

"This is at a time when phony kids your age are yelling, 'You adults have your alcohol, we want our drugs; you have polluted our water and our air, you have polluted this and that,' and all the rest of the garbage that comes out of your mouths.

"Meanwhile, you put yourselves above everybody else. I feel sorry for you.

"I want you to think of this for one year, and the reason why I say it:

"If you are sick, a doctor will treat you and he won't be on drugs. The lawyer who represents you won't be high on drugs, and the people in whose custody you'll be won't be on drugs.

"Your astronauts are not on drugs, and your president is not, and your legislators are not.

And your engineers who build the bridges that you drive across and the tunnels that you drive through are not on drugs, and those who build the planes that you fly in and the cars that you drive are not.

"Neither are those who build the bathrooms that you stink up with your lousy, rotten drugs.

"None of them have been on drugs, and this is because of people like your mother and father.

"But in the world of the future," Sepe went on, "the same may not be true. Teachers, doctors, lawyers, legislators — products of the new drug-oriented generation—may well be high as kites.

"You won't know whom to send your child to, or whom to trust your life to."

Sepe sighed and closed the case file.

"Let's see what kind of world you leave to your children," he said, "before you talk about the world that we left to ours."

Kids Counter Television 'Lies'

TORONTO (CP) — Eight Toronto youngsters who called television commercials "a jungle of lies" have produced a one-minute color commercial to show the adults how they think it should be done.

It all started when a forum was held at their school in suburban Don Mills last June. The students then called for stronger laws to police quality of products, particularly toys; they wanted fewer commercials; and they suggested the public be given free time to deny exaggerated claims.
